What Makes Us Human?

What makes us human? It can't be our soul because our soul is beyond any kind of form – human, angelic, anything.

It can't be our dominant position on this planet because to people from other planets – also human – we're considered an undeveloped society. Sheldon Nidle's sources called us "a vital yet primitive society." (1) SaLuSa called us "babes in arms." (2)

It could be our Adam and Eve Kadmon template. This template, we hear from exoanthropological circles, (3) is common in the universe.

Spirit Mythos website calls "Adam Kadmon" "an ancient qabbalistic word for 'universal man.' It is the template or design for the human being." (4)

David Wilcock hypothesized that many lines of evolution culminate, on the physical plane, in the human form:

"The human body shows up in the galaxy on every planet where life can form. It's a natural evolution. Some might get there by an insect; some might get there by a lizard; some might get there by mammals like we do; some might get there by cetaceans; some might get there even by vegetation, apparently." (5)

But this element of our humanness, our Adam Kadmon template, is contained in our DNA. So it has to be our DNA that makes us human. It's a repository of many things, human genes being only one of them. It contains historical data as well as codes for evolution and expansion. It may be thought of as supra-human.

Is that what makes us human? But there's no human quality yet. Perhaps I should change the question: what makes us more than human? What makes us humane?

And the answer to that, for me, is our ability to love. Love is generic. It's raw, organic and nutritious. Add flavors to it and it becomes wholly new and different. Add joy to love and it becomes sweet. Add compassion to love and it becomes irresistible. Add generosity to love and it becomes substantial.

So if I were to say what makes us humane, instead of simply bilaterally symmetrical, then I'd have to say it's our ability to love.

And an expansion in our ability to love, as will happen with the oncoming tsunami of love, is an expansion in humane being. What else helps us to expand it?

I'm not saying I'm red hot in these areas. I'm not. I see what it takes but I'm not walking on water. Each day I fill the bathtub an inch or so and get in and try to walk on it. Haven't gotten there yet. (Maybe Jesus will lend me his sandals. Just kidding!)

But I do know what else creates an expansion in humane being just the same. Trust does. Forgiveness does. Openness does. Transparency does. Self-revelation does. Letting others go first does. Sharing does. Oh my. I think we're doing another list of the divine qualities.

Let's cut to the chase. The divine qualities are what make us humane and what cause an expansion in humane being.

A great deal more expansion in humanness and we ascend. A great deal further progress and we leave humanness behind. We may become a formless being. We may become what no human has ever conceived. But what causes an expansion in those states does not change. It's love, love and more love. Joy, joy and more joy. Compassion, compassion and more compassion.

This is a diet we never tire of and one that never causes illness or infirmity. Love is the ambrosia of the Gods, the immortal nectar, the soma and the soma.

Therefore, on balance, I'd have to say that our DNA is what makes us human. But that isn't the most important part. The most important part are the divine qualities that make us humane.

What Does It Mean to be Human? April 8, 2012

“What Does It Mean to be Human?,” April 8, 2012, at <http://goldenageofgaia.com/2012/04/08/what-does-it-mean-to-be-human/>

I’m glad so many people enjoyed the last article in this series (1) and are interested in beginning a global conversation. Let’s take another step towards starting one. A global conversation is addressed to the human race. So perhaps I can be permitted a few words on my view of what it means to be human.

I’m not an anthropologist but I worked as a cultural historian. Nonetheless this is meant as a commonsensical discussion and not one that’s somehow scholarly or academic.

What does it mean to be human? Believe it or not, human beings can achieve that level of evolution by different paths. David Wilcock described some of them:

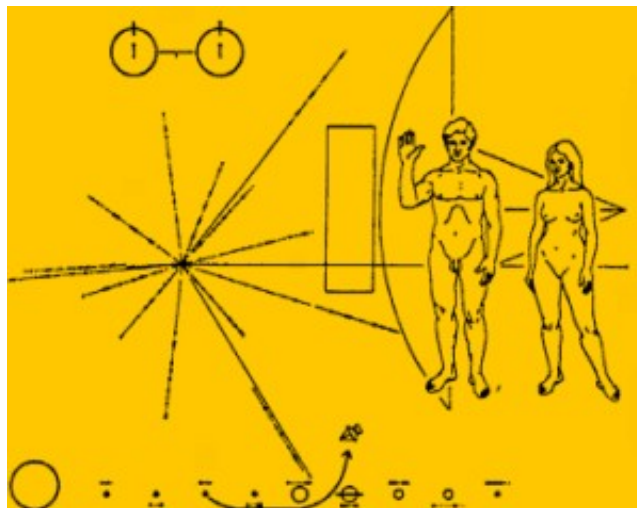

“The human body shows up in the galaxy on every planet where life can form. It’s a natural evolution. Some might get there by an insect; some might get there by a lizard; some might get there by mammals like we do; some might get there by cetaceans; some might get there even by vegetation, apparently.” (2)

Even though humans can be mammalian, reptilian, or even plant-based, the humans around our planet at the present time are all of the same mammalian genetic makeup as we are; in fact they’re our ancestors, the races that first populated the Earth.

The basic human form is known as the Adam/Eve Kadmon template and is best represented in Leonardo’s drawing (above) or the Voyager Plaque (below). That template is upright, bipedal, bilaterally symmetrical, with stereoscopic vision located on the front of the face, arms, legs, opposable thumbs, a brain with hemispheres, etc.

The form is human, but the soul divine. The soul is at a level of evolution called being human. As the saying goes, we are not humans having a spiritual experience but spirits having a human experience. We’re immortal and live many lives, only some of them as humans.

Voyager plaque

The physical human form has certain aspects: the biological, cultural, emotional, and spiritual. The biological aspect centers around the need to eat, drink, breathe, sleep, procreate, clothe ourselves, etc. These needs are only associated with the Third Dimension. On higher dimensions, our needs are fewer and our means of satisfying them don't depend as much on work. We share this 3D level of existence with animals, but we satisfy our needs in a peculiarly human way, through the use of culture and tools.

The cultural aspect relates to the fact that we traffic in ideas. Culture = ideas. To create an idea that can be communicated, we bestow meaning on symbols, freely and arbitrarily. This tall wooden thing before me I think I will call a "tree." (Non, non, un "arbre.") This barking animal I will call a "dog." (Non non, un "chien.") With ideas, we communicate and dream, rehearse and remember. We get the idea, make believe, and pass the word along.

When I was a cultural historian, I used to say that culture was an organization of ideas, manifest in act and artifact, though consisting of neither, by means of which we think, respond and take purposive action. We live in a world of ideas, whether animals do or not. (Some say they do.)

There's an emotional aspect to us which builds on both biology and culture. We respond emotionally to our body's needs and urges and to our thoughts and actions. We respond emotionally to others. We even respond emotionally to our dreams and fantasies. We love and hate, desire and reject, lean towards and away from. We're repulsed and inspired, jubilant and depressed, encouraged and discouraged. And we then we double back and have thoughts about our emotions.

The spiritual aspect builds on the cultural and emotional, beginning with the power to make an object of ourselves. Taking cognizance of ourselves we term "self-consciousness." It was a huge innovation. We can make of anything an object and end up making one of God as well.

As we expand our consciousness more and more, moving towards the event for which all life was created (enlightenment), we move ever closer to transforming God from an object into the one and only Subject. We've moved from self-consciousness to Self-Realization, using object-consciousness to reach consciousness without an object.

SaLuSa of Sirius

These processes are what all of us humans share. If we want to take a human perspective rather than an American or a Catholic or a Republican one, then we'll be looking at what we are and do relative to our biological, cultural, emotional, and spiritual selves and others.

We haven't been speaking about these before now - not commonly. Certain scholars do, but not the mass of society. We've been speaking about Presidential candidates, the pound sterling, and housing prices. We've been speaking about the Vatican, and Burma, and space shuttles. Always we take the partial view, the specific view, the named and unique perspective. Always we focus on differences.

But we're being obliged to become aware of ourselves as a planet by the guests who are coming to dinner. If we're talking about Pleiadians and Arcturians, how can we not think about terrestrials? We're suddenly finding that we need to know more about ourselves, even as we attempt to know more about them. We can see that the galactics are studying us. Just get yourselves onto Ellie Miser's distribution list. Ellie is a conscious Pleiadian starseed who studies us like an anthropologist.

They're studying us. We're studying them. Now we must also study us. We have to survey us, take stock of our credits and debits, surpluses and insufficiencies, gifts and weaknesses.

Asket, Billy Meier's human Timorian mentor

As I said in an earlier article, in regard to the work that needs to be done between now and the end of the year, primarily what we address is “problems.” We aim to turn unworkability into workability.

But we also need to get to know each other from a human vantage point. After years of focusing on our differences, we now need to focus on our similarities. What ties us together? We all have the same biological needs. We all live our lives by using and communicating ideas. We all have emotional reactions to things. And many of us also feel the tug of the spiritual.

So this is what it means to be human - at least on Planet Earth. Who's coming to dinner are more humans like us, from other dimensions and places. We already know they'll have the Adam Kadmon form. Their bodies may have some of the biological processes that ours do or maybe fewer of them. They'll traffic in ideas, though perhaps telepathically. They'll react to things with emotions, though less dramatically than us. And we know they worship the same God, see the purpose of life as knowing themselves and God as one, and live their lives in service to others.

So this is a framework that we can use to see what it means to be a human being, whether we are talking about us as humans or the galactics. As we begin our global conversation, we're talking as one human being to another and what this article describes is what we share in common.

We Gaians, Sept. 10, 2010

An idealized depiction of a Gaian

“We Gaians,” September 10, 2010, at <http://goldenageofgaia.com/2010/09/10/we-gaians/>

Each time I type “terrestrial,” my fingers become the hundred feet of a caterpillar who just became aware of walking. They trip all over themselves.

The effort required to type that word slows me down to a crawl. I must find a better term.

Moreover, if there are “terrestrials,” there must then be “extraterrestrials.” Otherwise who are terrestrials defined in juxtaposition to? There would only be terrestrials and hence no need to define the group as being apart from anyone else.

But the word “extraterrestrial” carries a lot of negative baggage, too many War of the Worlds connotations. And, besides, it still has that caterpillar word in it: “terrestrials.” Can we not find a better set of words?

By the power vested in me as a sovereign citizen of planet Earth, I hereby adopt the word “Gaian” to replace “terrestrial.” “Gaia” is Mother Earth. “Gaian” is an intelligent life form born and resident on Planet Earth.

And since we tend to informalize words these days, it won’t be long before that word becomes “gaian” instead of “Gaian” and so I further propose that we move directly to that point and use the word, “gaian,” as the baseline term for what has till now been called terrestrial, earthling, Earthian, or terran.

Now we need to find a replacement for “extaterrestrial.” By the same power vested in me, I recommend the word “galactic.”

I’ve been criticized for that word because, it has been said, it refers to the galaxy rather than the cosmos or universe.

But I’m not using it that way. I’m using it to mean an intelligent life form born and resident in a place within this universe (rather than within a parallel universe) and from this galaxy or another, but not from Earth.

Whether these two terms catch on or not depends on usage. If no one uses them, they are consigned to the dustbin of history. Anthropologist Leslie White once said (and I paraphrase from memory) that we traffic in symbols, which are things and events upon which we freely and arbitrarily bestow meaning.

There is no inherent logic to our doing so. We take an organism made of cellulose that grows upwards to varying heights and call it a “tree” in English. But “tree” in French is “arbre”; in Greek, “dentro”; in Italian, “albero”; etc. These words are just what they are; they are not God-given or royally-mandated. They are freely and arbitrarily created.

Now that we have a new, suggested set of terms, let's look at two strange things that can be seen in the illustrations of the galactics posted with this article. One is that most of the creatures appear to be human. I don't say "humanoid" because it seems to me that "humanoid" is a gaian notion and not probably attractive to other, galactic humans. To them, we may seem "humanoid" and probably primitive humanoids at that. (1)

And the second is that some of them appear to have a different evolutionary derivation than we gaian humans do. So let me now turn to that subject.

Apparently the human template, which is known in exoanthropological circles (2) as the "Adam Kadmon" template, is very common in the universe. Spirit Mythos website calls "Adam Kadmon" "an ancient qabbalistic word for 'universal man.' It is the template or design for the human being." (3)

David Wilcock hypothesized that many lines of evolution culminate, on the physical plane, in the human form:

"The human body shows up in the galaxy on every planet where life can form. It's a natural evolution. Some might get there by an insect; some might get there by a lizard; some might get there by mammals like we do; some might get there by cetaceans; some might get there even by vegetation, apparently." (4)

Galactic: Imaginative depiction of reptilian human

Talk show host Billy Cooper, who was murdered for predicting 9/11 before it happened and blowing the whistle on it after, gave an illustration of perhaps the most difficult category of human evolutionary lines to imagine: the chlorophyl- or plant-based galactic. Here he describes one from his whistle-blowing 1989 lecture, The Secret Government:

“Living Alien Rescued at Roswell, New Mexico, 1949

“The living alien that had been rescued from the 1949 Roswell crash [there were several Roswell crashes, precipitated by American jamming of galactic controls using radar] was named “EBE”. Its name had been suggested by Dr. Vannever Bush as an acronym for Extraterrestrial Biological Entity.

Galactic: Semjase, Billy Meier's Pleiadian contact

“EBE had a tendency to lie and for over a year would give only the expected answer to questions asked by his interrogators. Those questions which would have resulted in an undesirable answer went unanswered.

“At some point during the second year of captivity he began to open up and the information derived from EBE was startling, to say the least. This compilation of his revelations became the foundation of what would later be called the “Yellow Book”. Photographs were taken of EBE which, among others, I and Bill English were to view years later in Project GRUDGE 13.

“Alien Biological System Based on Chlorophyll Process

“In late 1951 EBE became very ill and medical personnel had been unable to determine the cause of his illness as they had no background about his biological structure from which to draw. EBE’s biological system was chlorophyll-based and processed food into energy much the same as plants did. Waste material was excreted the same as plants. It was decided that an expert in botany was called for.

Galactic: Little Grey or Zeta Reticulan held in captivity

“A botanist, Dr. Guillermo Mendoza, was brought in to help EBE recover. Dr. Mendoza worked hard to save his life until EBE died in mid-1952. Dr. Mendoza became an expert on alien Biology. Meanwhile in the futile attempt to save EBE and to gain favor with this technologically-superior alien race, the United States began broadcasting into the vast regions of space a call for help early in 1952. The call went unanswered as EBE’s life ebbed away but the project continued as an effort of good faith.” (5)

This Roswell galactic, then, may be an example of a human who reached the “Adam Kadmon” stage by a plant-based line of evolution. The last question I want to deal with here is the fact that, once the galactics who are known to be presently around our planet in ships cloaked from view, disclose themselves, most of them will probably be human in form for some time to come. Why is that?

Galactic: Photo of "Mona Lisa," deceased ET found in spaceship on the Moon by Apollo 20

Let us move gradually to the answer, beginning with the declaration of one Venusian communicator, Ker-On, that his compatriots are very much like us in form.

“We stand amongst those who are most like the human form, and we could easily pass as one of you.” (6)

Now let us move to one who is not so much like us in form but who can shape-shift. Matthew Ward invited a galactic named Icarus (whether that was his real name or one he adopted for the purposes of the interview, I don’t know) to speak through his medium, his mother Suzy Ward. He resembled humans less. Icarus's people, like all the benevolent galactics assembling around our Earth at this time, are here to help us with Ascension in 2012:

“We are sending you our image. As you see, we are not humanoid in appearance, but only in our natural habitat do we appear tall, rangy, silver and very, very thin, with large eyes and long nimble fingers. We do not much care for the ‘spider’ of your thought, but it is your comparison and so we accept it.

“We can embody to look exactly like any form we imagine or wish to imitate, including just like you. That is how many of us are among you already and you are not the least bit aware of it! We are assisting in the cleansing [of Earth] by being in influential positions so we can make a difference in decisions that affect the environment, the pollution and industries, and in other ways that can reduce the negativity on Earth and therefore reduce the destruction of terra firma and seas.

“We are part of a force in Earth-human disguise that cannot openly declare its presence or purpose, which is the very salvation of your planet! We would like to be known as who we are naturally and no longer hide among you. However, it is not yet time according to our messages directly from God, who rules all major decisions in this universe and has His own timetable for optimum benefits to all concerned.” (7)

In his many messages to us, which we've been following on this site and others, SaLuSa, a human from Sirius, has also told us that his fellows of the Galactic Federation have come as part of a much larger united family.

Their purpose is to assist us with Ascension at the end of this cosmic cycle in 2012. They have overseen our evolution on Earth for hundreds of millennia and now wish to disclose their presence to us:

“The Galactic Federation comprises members that have already ascended and serve in the Light.” (8)

“We of the Galactic Federation are charged with looking after Mankind, and your upliftment and safe journey through to Ascension.” (9)

“At some stage you had to come out of your cocoon where extraterrestrial life was concerned. It is now time to meet your ancestors who are your space family, who have been responsible for the evolution of the Human Race as you see it today. ... Accepting that life extends well beyond your planet and that it abounds everywhere, and mostly in the higher dimensions allows for a greater expansion of your consciousness.” (10)

When they do reveal their presence, in order not to shock us with too many surprises all at once, the first races we’re permitted to meet will intentionally be human in form like us.

“The first ETs to be introduced would be those who are in like form and appearance to your Earth human bodies” (11)

So it’s timely that we get our ways of referring to them settled before they arrive. Once they do, disclosure being expected in a mere matter of months, everything will probably be chaos.

In this article, then, I’ve suggested different names for “terrestrials” and “extraterrestrials” for a number of reasons - to provide convenience for those who must use the words regularly and to get rid of unfortunate connotations by starting anew. The new baseline words I suggest are “gaian” and “galactic.”

I’ve glanced briefly at the notion of the human or “Adam Kadmon” template and diverse lines that commonly culminate in the human stage of evolution. I have suggested that, when the galactics disclose their presence around the planet, the first representatives of their federations and councils for some time to come will be of the human form or “Adam Kadmon” template.

Whether gaian or galactic, we are a human family. To us, they are our ancestors in some cases and in others our future.

Awareness and Consciousness

A word is a symbol upon which we humans freely and arbitrarily bestow meaning.

The meaning of a word is not necessarily inherent in the word itself. Its meaning may be established by its usage.

If a community of usage arises around that meaning, then it may become established within its bounds. If no community arises, then the meaning of the word may not catch on and it may join other discarded meanings.

There are also contexts in which the meaning of a word may change. A word's meaning can change over time or vary from subgroup to subgroup. Fads and fashions may arise that change the meaning of a word.

I'd like to use the words "awareness" and "consciousness" in special ways. Until now the two words have been more or less synonymous.

But I'd like to reserve "awareness" for that form of knowledge that comes to us through an observer focusing attention. And I'd like to reserve "consciousness" for knowledge that comes to us from an internal sensing, intuiting, inspiration, or similar unfocussed or diffusely-focused attention.

I make this distinction for the conceptual fertility it may lead to, what used to be called its "heuristic" value (a word that has more or less lost its community of usage). If no value arises from the distinction, then it'll simply fade away over time and be forgotten.

It could be said that awareness involves an active process of bringing one's attention to whatever can be made an object of, whether internal or external, whereas consciousness is a passive process of relaxing focused attention and receiving information from sources known or unknown.

I observe myself (I am aware) of my using both processes in my writing. I observe, notice and make note of whatever I focus my attention on. I observe patterns in its structure or process. I observe changes over time. I observe patterns in its relationship, connection to or separation from other things.

At the same time, I open myself to and receive information from (am conscious of) thoughts that arise, feelings, hunches, urges, desires, etc. I may open myself to a flow of thought. I may receive thoughts one at a time and develop each thought before receiving the next.

As an actor or as an observer, I may switch from process to process - awareness to consciousness - depending on which seems to promise to take me the next few yards.

If I wish to raise my awareness, I may increase the number, range or magnification of things I focus my attention on. If I wish to raise my consciousness of things, I may relax myself, open myself more fully to subtle events or diffuse my attention.

If I'm engaged in work with others or work of an important nature, I may seek to raise my level of awareness of things or events around me or within me. If I'm engaged in raising my vibration or opening to the love and joy that we increasingly feel these days, I may wish to raise my level of consciousness.

I think this distinction may help us in the times ahead to choose how we wish to relate to projects associated with building Nova Earth vs. how we wish to relate to the expansion in our state of being associated with the tsunami of love and, later, Ascension. The more distinctions we create that make a difference, the clearer the road ahead becomes.

Listening Within

There are whales who hunt schools of herring by creating a wall of bubbles which the smaller fish won't breach. It drives the herring into tighter and tighter circles and forces them to the surface. The whales then rise from below and scoop them up in their massive mouths.

That's a little like how a social paradigm works. Those who create or enforce a social paradigm erect a screen of bubbles around us, composed of injunctions ("shoulds") and control us by ridicule if we question them and an ascending ladder of sanctions, each harder to bear than the one before.

At last we don't stray beyond the wall of bubbles and behave in ways that those who work the paradigm want us to. Our lives become shaped by these confining walls constructed by our own minds.

One example happened to me some years ago. After the vision I had in 1987, in which I was shown the purpose of life (enlightenment), (1) I went to numerous university departments to see if I could do my doctoral dissertation on enlightenment. No one was willing to sponsor it.

At one point, I went to the Religious Studies Department and asked them if I could do it there. They replied that a subject like enlightenment was outside the purview of the University's Charter.

So the purpose of life was outside the university's purview. The reward for all action (enlightenment) was too. God meeting God as well. In what way was it a religious-studies department? And what more valuable subjects could the university keep us from?

The paradigm of empirical materialism (that only what we could touch, hear, smell, etc., is real) invited us to ridicule life after "death" and communication with the "dead." It required us to laugh at the notion of angels or risk ridicule. It caused us to deny that a human being had an immortal soul. And, at the time, it was the paradigm that informed - or rather enclosed - the university.

When we break free from a social paradigm, we leave the community of agreement. We're vulnerable to being ostracized. We've left the protection that society offers to those who conform. It can be lonely and stressful.

At this time, we're leaving many confining paradigms - by common consent. Social darwinism (that only the fittest survive), Christ as our only possible road to salvation, what a woman's place is, our repugnance for social welfare programs as being somehow "socialist," a debt-based society, rugged individualism - all these paradigms are falling around us.

And, yes, we breathe easier. And yes, we're finding support for this process from sources we seldom used to consider - like the Company of Heaven.

But it can also usher in a time of uncertainty, confusion, and anxiety.

When that arises, what might we do?

In a time of rampant paradigm change, I believe we need to turn our attention from external sources to internal sources. Everyone urges that - Archangel Michael, Jesus, Matthew Ward, every terrestrial sage I can think of.

The inner sources I'm referring to are the Higher Self or soul, the Company of Heaven, our guides, and even the Queen of Heaven, the Divine Mother.

They all use the same telephone line that runs through our hridayam or spiritual heart to our inner listening apparatus.

The way matters seem to have been arranged in an orderly cosmos is that this inner channel of communication is exactly where the answers to our questions are to be found.

It can take two forms: (1) a simple aid in making our everyday decisions in the absence of confining paradigms and (2) a much deeper fount of wisdom that assists us to resolve the mysteries of life and leads us home. Let's look at both.

To help us with our decisions, some people may hear voices. Others may see angels showing them pictures. Still others may feel a "yes" or a "no" to a question they have. That's the channel I use.

For instance, I was about to make a purchase online today and consulted the inner voice. It surprised me by saying "no." I was about to post an article yesterday and the inner voice said "no" until I reworked the article and then it said "yes."

It actually didn't say "yes" or "no." I felt an exhilaration (yes) or a glumness (no).

The second and deeper form of inner guidance, the fount of wisdom, has the scope and ability to lead us home.

Reliance on this deeper guidance will help us remain more generally stable and balanced while the false grids, archaic belief systems, and inadequate paradigms fall.

It has so many names - the inner voice, the voice of conscience, the inner guide, the still, small voice, the Guru within. Ultimately it emanates from God. Passed down from God, it passes to us through archangels, ascended masters, and guides.

When I studied life on the astral planes in New Maps of Heaven, (2) I saw all spirits relying on communication from the higher dimensions to guide their actions and reveal the mysteries to them. There, inner guidance was a fact of life and well-accepted. It's only here that we look at it askance.

The way to access the inner voice is to listen within. And "listening" doesn't simply imply listening. It means opening ourselves to whatever inner sense or conduit that brings us wise guidance.

The more we listen to it, the easier it becomes to hear it and feel it. I call it a lifeline. I'm sure it brings an expansion in humanness.

Add Yourself as a Contact

"Far out!"

Outlook just asked me if I wanted to add myself as a contact.

Excuse me?

Well, wait a minute. Maybe that's not such a bad idea.

The awareness path is about making contact with ourselves - with our Self. Let's look at some features of it.

I'm the only contact I have, the only mechanism through which I encounter and experience the world. I reach the conclusions and make the decisions that make life show up for me the way it does.

And I'm the one responsible for how it turned out - at least for my interpretation of it. John Enright used to say: "Due to circumstances beyond my control, I am master of my fate and captain of my soul." (1) Ahhh, way beyond my control. Thank you, Divine Mother.

John would have been aware to the end. Once he quipped: "When the avalanche is coming down on you, you can say, 'Oh my God! It's going to hit me!' or you can say, 'Far out! What a way to go!'" (2)

John used to call his workshops Awareness, Responsibility and Communication. I don't think I've seen a better formula for a well-rounded life.

Without a sense of personal responsibility, all I tend to be aware of is my neighbor's business. And my interpretations are often not kindly but judgmental. And if I don't communicate what I'm aware of, much of what I observe becomes lost to me. Somehow communication "fixes" it.

Archangel Michael used to say "stand back and observe" when in conflict. I used to think that he meant ceasing contact, isolating one's self, and seeing what happens. But more recently he corrected that impression.

He confirmed that he meant stepping back into the heart, the main seat of awareness, from the peripheries where the excited emotions express themselves. Always, the movement is back into awareness, plain, bare awareness. Or what Eckhart calls "presence."

Decades ago, in following the awareness path, we'd do it individually, obviously, but we also did it in groups. The group experience at that time was rich and unforgettable. There isn't anything that I'm aware of today that matches it. It's one ember I'm blowing on mightily, as we expand the meaning of humanness. It's one fire I'd like to see blaze.

It all starts with being aware of ourselves, moment by moment, continuously. While we don't cease interaction with the outside world, our interest in what's going on with our neighbors does gradually subside.

We'd generally try to stay with ourselves, as a meditation. And after a time the act of staying with one's self, awaredly, brought many satisfactions and benefits: freedom from stress, a feeling of congruency, multidimensional experiences (I mean that in the old sense of the word).

As tension increases, awareness decreases and we as a world have just been through decades of tension, exploitation and oppression. I consider that the treatment we've been through has left widespread, unconscious social trauma. As we now bring more peace and harmony into our world, so far slowly, gradually, it's awareness of ourselves that will assist and allow us to pull out of those buried memories.

On Seeing a Core Issue

My commitment is to go through Ascension publicly and that requires going through the bad as well as the good.

At this moment, core issues are coming up for observation and acknowledgment. I'm told this is part of the tsunami of love: the forcing up of whatever in us is incomplete.

The core issue that's arisen and begs recognition at this moment is around control. It'd be melodramatic of me to say that I'm a control freak. But the control issues I have are nonetheless staring me in the face at this moment in time.

It's hard to call oneself on one's own number. But an unacknowledged core issue hurts more and longer than one that's acknowledged.

John Enright used to say: "Unawareness leads to momentary relief and continuing pain; awareness leads to momentary pain and continuing relief."
(1) I know that's true.

Who wants to think of themselves as a control freak?

Yet I have to look at this if I want to be free of it. Unless I acknowledge what's actually there, it remains.

So I take a look at it, try it on, test it out, which is what we're invited to do on the awareness path.

My mission in the first half of my life, so to speak, was to control the control freaks. But in the process I also became a controller. Take away the subject being controlled - in this case, a controller - and I'm left with my own desire to control.

And I see it. The moment I own it, I see it. "You have to be able to see what you're doing to see that you don't see it." (2) I do see it.

The picture slowly came together from bits of evidence here and there. I saw myself as the runt of the litter controlling by holding things up - strategically.

I saw myself as the one who got his way by putting a stick in the spokes of the wheel. You want to go on a vacation? We will - if you pay attention to me. I was an expert in "being difficult" and I do know that my Waterloo, my nuclear issue, is to come up against another expert in being difficult.

But I didn't relate what I already knew to control issues.

I saw the moment when I utterly lost control - when my father shouted at me from inches away from my face. I shattered into a million pieces. That moment probably sealed my fate. My life ever after became about resisting ever experiencing that extent of loss of control again.

I saw the violence in our family and how I hated being controlled by it. Later I saw myself become the one who controlled the control freaks. I became the policeman of the world.

As the pieces of the puzzle became clear to me (and this process has taken me weeks), I found myself in an "Aha!" moment. I saw the whole picture. I already knew something was wrong and needed addressing. But I didn't see what it was. And now I did.

I don't want to take the matter too far and become melodramatic, but I also don't want to minimize it.

I'm amazed at what I'm seeing at this moment. I have all the makings of a first-class control freak. It's only what I learned from the growth movement and my stand that I won't control others that prevents me from going all the way.

What we resist persists. What we oppose we become. Out of our fear of being controlled comes control.

Oh, my gosh.

The Preliminary Impact of the Tsunami of Love

The tsunami of love has not hit us yet at its height, but I sense that it's begun at a lower level.

My concern is that the way we live our normal round of life may prevent us from seeing its impact, at this preliminary stage.

In our society, we're more or less used to physical sensations which are gross rather than subtle, to use the terminology of S.N. Goenka, from Vipassana Meditation.

We eat meat with rich sauces, drink beverages with a kick, consume sweet desserts, munch on salty snacks, etc. All of these contribute to a starburst of sensation.

And so, I think, when we look for the impact of these beginning stages of the tsunami of love, we come from the expectation that it will knock us over by its obviousness.

But the impact is happening not on our externally-oriented sense organs, but inside of us, in a very subtle and delicate place.

In some of the earlier energy upgrades, I used to say that my emotional floor just got raised. What I meant by that is that I no longer went as far down as I used to. I remained in a range of feeling that was more pleasant and suitable to me.

This isn't exactly like that but similar in context. What it feels to me more like is a blossoming. There's more of a bursting out of our normal energy envelope. The nearest word I can find to describe it is that it's more like an awakening than a raising of our emotional floor.

But it's also more than just an awakening. It's an enabling, an empowering, and an ennobling. I'd call this process "getting bigger." But I could also call it the first intimations of oneness, universal love, etc.

So if we're looking for a starburst of sensation, we may be looking in the wrong place. We may never see the impact of these energies on us in this preliminary phase.

I find that impact to be subtle, barely detectable. By observing myself very closely and carefully, I become aware of it and discern it.

Subtle but Simple

Psychologist John Enright used to call his workshops “hard-nosed permission giving.” He'd give us permission to be ourselves, to choose, to value what we valued.

But he was hard-nosed about it in that he would not accept victim stories, disempowerment and the other binds that tie us that we think of today as "false grids."

An example of hard-nosed permission giving is Werner Erhard saying, if we wanted to know what our intention was, we had only to look at what we've experienced. What we intended is almost always what we end up experiencing. What we choose is what we draw to ourselves.

Not much room there for feeling like a victim.

Nonetheless, I have heard the Company of Heaven say that some events in one person's life were not in their soul contract - that is, they didn't bring it to themselves. One could say they were the victim of outside circumstances in that situation.

But the point remains that the smaller the area in which we feel victimized, the greater our sense of personal power, satisfaction, aliveness, etc.

On another occasion Werner said that, if we wanted to be happy, we had only to choose what we have rather than what we don't have.

For years, I thought he was talking about what the Buddha might have called the cycle of desire. Our constant hankering after what we don't have is what brings restlessness to the mind. Restlessness of the mind is what denies us peace and prevents us from unveiling the divine qualities that are already ours.

But now I think there was more to Werner's point.

The really important things that we always, already have are the internal things. Again and again I see that these internal things like aliveness, satisfaction, and completion are the things really worth valuing and the things that are most attractive (and enduringly attractive) to the greatest number of people.

Feeling happy, fulfilled, or loving seems more important than what possessions we may or may not have. How many people know someone who owns a Maserati and is unhappy? (Well, probably not many, but you know what I mean.)

How can we feel joy when we watch events in the Ukraine? Archangel Michael responds:

"This is a time of joy. And, yes, even amidst the chaos which is the breaking of the ice floes, there is time for joy. And it comes from within you and it comes from outside of you and it swirls all around you. Claim it and claim it for your own.

"Bring it deep within that it may marry the joy within, explode and grow, and then share it with each and every being you meet and even those you don't." (1)

The joy that we feel is raising the vibrations of those around us, I think.

Other people, still mired in the jealousy that Archangel Gabrielle spoke about on An Hour with an Angel, (2) want us to feel or respond with anger and hatred, but our insistence on allowing our inner joy to emerge may just turn out to be the most profitable response we can make to the situation.

I see a lot of joy in the people around me. And I'm looking at my own life and saying "Why don't I have joy?"

And the answer is that I haven't been choosing it. Joy is an example of what we've already got rather than what we don't have.

It's always, already there. I just don't choose it.

The whole thing is so subtle but so simple.

At this moment, I am getting it. And the whole thing seems like a big joke.

Because I've held the valuable things as being outside myself, I've been hankering for things I don't have. But when I see that the valuable things are actually inside myself, I also see that I already have them and simply haven't been choosing them.

What stands between me and my joy are my core issues. When I asked Archangel Michael recently what the direct means of getting at my core issues was, he replied: "Laugh at yourself." He could also have said joy.

How do I be joyful? Be joyful. The answer is contained in the question.

Joy is the place I wish to get to and the means of getting there.

Subtle but simple.

Change Mastery Becoming Increasingly Important

A subject is bringing itself to my attention at this moment, looming as one of importance during the times ahead.

There's so much happening, so much changing, so much expanding occurring that I'm becoming aware of the importance of mastering stress and change.

I was going to say "managing stress and change" but the need seems to be for more than simply management. It's for mastery. And that again is a tall order. (1)

We may have managed to get this far without encountering the need for stress mastery perhaps, but I don't think we'll get much farther.

All change causes stress, even "good" change

All change seems to cause some stress. Anyone who tries to resist change for any reason may find their stress increasing. All resistance pushes a person further into the constructed self and further out of touch with reality.

And even if we respond to change with glee, glee can lead to stress as surely as glum.

We can be really happy about certain changes, as with the arrival of prosperity and love. We can be ecstatic. We can be joyful.

Archangel Michael said to me in a personal reading on June 16, 2011 relating to Disclosure: "We want it to be controlled excitement, openness for discussion, ... but we don't want it -- which is going to be your desire -- to be over-the-top euphoric."

The changes brought about with even glee can be as stressful as the changes brought by, say, an illness or an accident.

I could illustrate one thing that happens at a time like that by an incident from my own life. I was gleeful that so many lightworkers were identifying themselves to the Golden Age of Gaia and wanting to join us in our work.

However I got euphoric, careless, and humorous and made gaffes, which threatened my constructed self or, to be more precise, my self-image.

At times of glee, one is in danger of going too far, making a gaffe, bringing the house down on one's head. Anyone tightly holding on to the constructed self and image management too tightly will enter a time of high stress when they let themselves go into glee.

Had I responded by simply managing my image, I probably would have succumbed to the stress. I had to rescue myself from imprudence or foolishness ("over-the-top euphoria") in the face of delight by getting bigger, which I'll discuss at greater length below.

But at the same time, as if that weren't enough, unexpressed joy can be an upset. If we can't find anyone who can hear us, appreciate the space we're in, or join us in that glee, that in itself can trip us into unwanted feelings.

We make distinctions between eustress and distress, "good stress" and "bad stress," but all stress takes us away from our center and locates us in our periphery, where we're separated mentally and emotionally from the wellspring of love, wisdom, prudence, etc., located in the heart or center.

What therefore is to be done about stress? It's something we won't escape considering, I think.

Getting bigger

The first thing that comes to my mind is not to resist the push for expansion, for growth, for getting bigger. Because the present is one of those times when the need to get bigger is written into things. And resisting the inevitable is crazy-making, stressful par excellence.

There'll be no escaping getting bigger. One cannot take on the goal of building Nova Earth and not invite the necessity of expanding and mastering the stress that comes with the work. One cannot open to Ascension in a world that knows nothing of it or welcome galactics to a society in which many fear them and also not experience an increase in stress.

Let's look again at the increase in lightworkers wanting to join us our work.

That meant that I was meeting more new people than I ever had in my life (and I'm a monk by nature!). The amount of time I spent a day in contact was eating into everything else. I had to do something to make things manageable.

So Big Steve (my "better sense") arose to to take care of Little Steve. I was forced to get bigger, to expand to save myself from focusing on the stress and suddenly imploding (as Archangel Michael said could happen). (2) Big Steve started to sort out my priorities one by one in the face of Little Steve feeling overwhelmed.

I had to sharpen my discernment as I extended my contacts. I had to assist myself to get through the experience of increasing my circle so significantly in so short a time. One reason after another rolled out of my mind for getting bigger.

Remaining grounded

The second thing that arose for me was the necessity of remaining grounded.

Linda Dillon begins her Tsunami of Love and Thirteenth Octave meditations (I believe) with the suggestion that we strongly connect to Gaia so as not to fly off into space.

I found myself one day actually envisioning latching a strong hook to an iron rod in the middle of Gaia in order to stay grounded. At that moment I saw the utter necessity of staying rooted in these times. Whether such an envisioning actually results in something or simply acts on the mind, it did lead to me feeling grounded.

Simplifying

The third felt necessity was to keep everything as simple as possible. I felt a strong desire to simplify everything in my life that was capable of being simplified.

I let go of attachments to favorite foods and set routines. I felt the need not to have my attachments cause me to collapse through trying to satisfy them or stick to them.

At first the felt need to simplify began as a desire to throw out unused belongings but very quickly it became about simplifying my thoughts and desires generally. Then it led to a desire to meditate. All of this had the effect of clearing up the airwaves of unnecessary noise (clamoring thoughts) and that settled me down.

Getting serious about commitments

The fourth felt necessity was to toss aside all things that didn't lead to the service of the Mother, to get smart and serious about my commitments.

I surrendered to the agenda of growing, expanding, getting bigger. Anyone who wishes or tries to remain small or play small may have a hard time in this next phase of our preparation for Ascension and building Nova Earth, I think.

As I said in the beginning of this post, that seems to be the overriding pull on us these days. We call it “rising to the occasion” or “taking on a big project.” But in reality the demands and stress of change are confronting us and requiring all of us to get bigger.

On and on the alterations in my behaviour went. I found myself going through a makeover in the face of my comprehension of how quickly and extensively stress can increase as we really dig into our lightwork. And it sobered me.

Reducing stress any way we can

Stress reduction, relaxation, time to oneself - all of these will increase in importance in the time ahead. Meditation, clearing barriers, taking time to breathe and smell the flowers along the way - these will cease being luxuries and become necessities as we really dig into our work.

Using the Company's higher-dimensional strategies such as immersing ourselves in the violet flame, asking that stress be removed, going into the healing chambers aboard ship, etc., also can be used.

And all of this is the hidden side of lightwork - the mastering of change and stress.

But it's becoming increasingly pressing and important.

Higher Modes of Functioning

As prosperity approaches and with it the release from our grinding financial situation generally, many people appear to be breaking free of the constraints and binds that tie them generally.

It can be a raucous time and some of the breaking free can be inconvenient and appear threatening but, in my opinion, it's a necessary process to go through, regardless.

Others are looking at higher modes of functioning. And that's something I wanted to discuss at more length today.

So far we've been volunteer lightworkers. And we may still remain voluntary lightworkers (or not) after financial reconstruction. It may not be that which changes.

But other things will.

The biggest change I can see is that we'll have to and want to learn to work together in well-functioning, cooperative units if we're to build Nova Earth. And that in turn raises numerous topics to consideration.

One is the subject of higher modes of functioning. If we really look at the way our higher selves function, and here I'm going on memory since I'm not functioning from my higher self at the moment, we'll see that certain actions come from the mind/body complex and others come from the higher self.

I could have said from the heart or the soul. They're all the same thing. The soul "lives" on the other side of the hridayam, or spiritual heart, the pinprick that walls off our physical body from the soul. (1) Certain urges, thoughts, and actions either come from the soul or invoke (or "stir") the soul.

All we have to do to test that out and see it is to take a stand on something. A firm "no" in the face of immoral or unethical behavior stirs the soul. There are other things that stir the soul and it's these things we need to cultivate, I think.

One is to make a promise or a commitment. Test it out. Watch the soul stir in the face of us nailing ourselves to the mast. Another is to tell the truth at the very deepest level. Another is to share a withhold, something we've said or done which we're trying to keep a secret.

If the divine qualities liberate, the mundane qualities bind. Secretiveness, wishy-washiness, going back on our word - all of these bind us, whereas the soul is stalwart, uncompromisingly moral and ethical, and only "comes alive" when we take the high road.

But many people don't enjoy the process of stepping into the higher ways. Being woken up, being made to commit ourselves, being asked to share what we're hiding - these are not popular calls. But sooner or later, that's where we need to go, I think, if we're to function on a level needed to build Nova Earth, a world that works.

My intention is to begin acting that way myself, to "be the change we want to see," as Graham, quoting Gandhi, said on The Brilliance Within. I don't think I'm going to go the route of requiring that of others, although I may ask them what their commitment is, what the withhold is, what the down-deep truth is.

No, wait a minute. I think I'll just be the change myself and trust that these wonderful energies are waking us all up at our own pace and in our own time. I think we're far enough down the road that the call is operating on all of us by now.

On the Credibility of Sources

From time to time, people ask me why we don't post particular channeled messages. Maybe I can say a word about that and illustrate it with a case in point.

Wes Annac recently said: "Some channeled material out there obviously isn't credible. Some of it can't be taken seriously." (1) I very much enjoyed what Wes had to say next in that article, which speaks for me as well.

"In my experience, there's a wealth of genuine material that not only informs, but uplifts in an unprecedented way. If I can be perfectly honest, channeled messages are, to me, a form of gospel that I'm happy to study.

"Christians might study the unfortunately distorted bible, but personally, my gospel comes from the amazingly pure channelings we're being given. I've studied credible and non-credible channeled material, and I always discern what I read by the amount of light in it and the extent to which it encourages, uplifts, inspires, and empowers.

"This is the aim of channeled material, beyond giving us helpful information. It's intended to uplift our minds and hearts as it informs us about important spiritual (and sometimes contemporary) matters that have to do with our welcoming of a new earth." (2)

In another article, he shared how his early attempts were sometimes criticized as showing the presence of his own self and he agreed that that may have happened on occasion. But Wes is an example of a channel who has stuck with it through the growing pains and gives clearer and more compelling messages with every fresh endeavor.

Here's an example of a statement in a recent message that's credited to Source/God that I don't think Source/God would say:

"The One is solemnly warning every single of Its entities that, if need be, It will cause a ... de-manifestation of their existence if they continue opposing the desire It has for all to live in peace and harmony."

Let's spend a moment looking at this statement for discernment's sake and then go back to the more general topic. We have to ask ourselves: Why would the all-loving God warn anyone of anything? Is there a shade of duality in the God of All? Is there a shade of partiality, worry or concern?

One has to look at how much fear such a comment might raise in people. Is this a punishing God who wants us to behave? Does he want us to feel afraid of being liquidated? How credible is that?

I'm not aware of any reliable message in which the One has said "it's my way or the highway."

Furthermore, to threaten humanity with demanifestation, also called liquidation or dematerialization, is not something I'd expect Source/God to say.

"Demanifestation" does happen, but very, very rarely and only after the individual is given one last lifetime to come around. Speaking of Irma Grese, the butcher of Belsen, afterlife communicator Philip Gilbert said:

"The woman is a black magician and will be 'liquidated.' She had to incarnate first. Why, I don't understand, but, before you can be 'annulled,' you have to re-incarnate - perhaps as a last chance." (3)

In a later communication, after seeking counsel on the matter, he returned to the subject:

"They tell me that there are, very, very rarely, entities who get so low that they can only descend - and be liquidated. We don't like to think of it here. ...

"Irma was an 'old soul' in the bad sense - she had been forced to re-incarnate as a last chance." (4)

"As, I'm told, 'liquidation' only comes as a last step on a long path of misery, foul thinking and acting." (5)

In terms of how God views the matter, the comments that Jesus made through Wes sound very credible to me:

"Your individual and collective perception is expanding, and along with this you're being greeted with increasing exposure of every darkly-inclined energy that's remained underneath your individual and collective perception.

"We should point out that exposure of the cabals will bring with it exposure of any latent darkness held within humanity, and that you'll be tasked with working to forgive the cabals and transmute the lower-oriented suppressed energy that'll rise." (6)

Unfortunately I've lost the reference for this next quote, but I wholeheartedly agree with it.

"[Any one] condition may contain the kernel of important lessons for mankind and be left in place for the learning that takes place. God does not simply eliminate the troublesome. It also, in many circumstances, has a role to play in the divine drama."

God "does not simply eliminate the troublesome." But the message in question portrays God as very much ready to do so.

The Company of Heaven has gone out of its way to leave no one out of Ascension who is willing to do the work. If that is the case, then why would the all-loving, all-seeing God be so careless as to threaten his children? Why would he throw away all the work his servants have done in such a precipitous manner? I don't think he would.

For this reason, we would not post this channeled message. And it serves as an example of messages we don't post.

Every reading I've had with Archangel Michael, when I ask him for his assessment of some sources, he surprises me with how liberal he is.

Here's what he said to me in mid-2013:

"Any channels that are coming to you - and this is part of our platform - it is very unusual and seldom that I will give you a discouragement, shall I say, on a particular channel, but there are times that, even though they are up and down, there are gems that come through and that is why I do not say yes or no to particular channels.

"I say up and down and allow you or your staff to use your discernment. So it is important that people are given a chance and it is also feedback for them, as they are improving their ability to be clear transmitters.

"So they are becoming, and as they go they realize, 'Oh, perhaps some ego snuck in here.' It is not a criticism but it is a critique and in this way you are building a family of very strong channels." (7)

Archangel Michael has said some channels are following their own agenda. I can think of several channels that this has applied to. In the beginning I don't see what that agenda is and then it emerges over time. Again we would not post those channels.

So, even though I say this from time to time, the subject is dear to my heart and so I say it again: We go to some lengths to ensure that the channels that appear in our pages are as reliable as we can discern.

That's the reason why some channels don't appear here.

That's not to say that any channel who does not appear here is not credible. That too wouldn't be a fair statement. No, we aren't aware of all channels. And, until the Reval frees us up financially and we can expand, we only have so much space we can give to channeled messages of a day.

We make a selection from among those we know about and attempt to make that selection as credible as possible, using criteria such as plausibility, probability, the dimensionality of language, checking with higher sources like AAM, etc.

Realizing Oneness

One of the reasons that realizing oneness eludes me, when it does, is that I expect to see some evidence of us all being one in physical matters.

I look at others on the bus or on the street and wonder to myself, how I can be one with that person? Nothing about them resonates with me.

But the problem for me seems to lie in looking for that oneness in physicality.

Physically, all is difference. No two people look alike. No two people seem to act alike. No two people seem to desire all the same things. Everywhere we look we see difference.

Oneness relates to the soul level. At the level of the soul, we are all one. We are all one - in spirit.

What is that oneness? I could cut to the chase and say love. We are all one in love. But we are also one in joy, in our desire for peace and harmony, in our love of God - but at the soul level.

It awaits me connecting with my love to see, feel and connect with the love of another. It awaits me having an ever-increasing contact with my soul, or you could say my heart, because for me they're the same thing.

I'm feeling more and more contact with my soul these days. I often now reside in joy (yes, I'm choosing it) and am eager and excited about new vistas and new adventures - well, as long as I have the time and stamina to satisfactorily engage with them. And as I connect with it more and more, I also connect more and more with the fact that we are indeed all one, at soul level.

I Love My Mission

If you'd have asked me a week or two ago what my mission was, I would have said that I'm a communicator.

But I now see it in much more richness. I'm here to assist in creating a breakthrough in humanness. Of course Ascension is that breakthrough writ large. But I'm here to help, and undoubtedly you're here to help as well, to create that breakthrough from the ground up, not just in one fell swoop, so to speak.

I'm here (you may be too) to help us ease our exit from paradigms that didn't work in the past, won't work now and will never work in the future. I can name them: social darwinism, empirical materialism, capitalism, communism, the American dream, the Protestant work ethic - all the ways in which we've been manipulated to remain happy parents, eager consumers, and a docile work force.

I'm one of the luckiest people alive in that I love my mission. Whether it's expanding the meaning of humanness, or exploring the divine qualities, or promoting sacred rights, I love this work.

But my mission is the elephant in every room I enter - except I invited the elephant. That means I get to eat alone a lot. Well, with the elephant, I suppose. But that's the way I want it and I wouldn't trade it.

Archangel Michael described the new forms of relationship that will arise to take into account us mission-driven individuals:

“So [relationship] is more mission-driven than simply an ideation of what a partnership or a marriage is about. This notion — and it has been a human notion, and we could spend a great deal of time talking about how the power structures of union and marriage have evolved and shifted — but these unions do not require a set form. And that is new. It is original. It is how it is on this side. It is how it was in the very beginning.

“But there is a decision between the two souls on that form, depending on what you are working on, what you are achieving, what you are dreaming, what you are creating, how you are playing. And then the form follows the creation and the desire, rather than setting the form and then making everything fit the form. That is how you ended up with institutions that don’t work. So, you aren’t repeating that error. You have grown.

“And the form that these partnerships will take, or can take, by choice, will shift and morph, again depending on what you are dreaming, what you are desiring.

“But the key to this is freedom, complete liberation, and the acknowledgment, not in lip service, but on the deepest soul level, of the freedom of the person that you are joining with, the sanctity — yes, the sanctity! — of their path, of their choices, of their desires, of their decisions. So there is no push and pull. It is the ebb and flow. It is the infinity. It is the tide.” (1)

I do get that and I celebrate it. And it operates in me about as much as I imagine it'll be operating in others whose sense of mission grows.

I'm all about growth, awareness, expansion. I'm all about a lack of constraint and a maximization of freedom. I know for myself that I get crabby and scratchy if away from my mission for long and I tend to associate with others who are in the same place.

So this balancing of doing the work we came to do while still enjoying each other's company is a big part of making a success of the life I see ahead of us and ahead of me.

Many of these breakthroughs that I serve are being midwifed by the Company of Heaven. The tsunami of love, which is building, or the arrival of prosperity are two examples. Disclosure is another. These will shatter forever the narrow walls that enclose us and the binds that tie us.

I open to the breakthrough in love that's in the offing. I see the breakthrough in democracy being demanded around the world and support it. I invite a breakthrough in gender equality and am committed to it. And the same applies to breakthroughs on all other fronts known and unknown to me.

I'm committed to a widening of every definition of humanness, of every human experience, of every human capability.

At last I feel myself operating at a level that feels native to me. At last I've found my voice and don't wish to remain silent any longer, a closet servant of the Mother.

But I do need a rest. Creative explosions can be a wonderful thing. But they take copious amounts of energy and I am human. This lifetime!

All of this can wait. I know what I'm doing now and that should allow me to expend my energy in a regulated manner with my eye on the future, patiently creating.

Increasing Clarity

As I look into expanding the meaning of humanness, I become clearer and clearer about my path and my excitement increases.

In general mine is the path of awareness. In general, among lightworkers, I associate most with those familiar with the learnings of the Growth Movement. But specifically my path is the path of authenticity.

I did not say I was authentic. Authenticity is the goal I'm drawn to day after day.

I did not say I was perfect and make no pretensions to it.

The path of authenticity involves looking at one's self, maintaining a kind of radar fix almost continually on what I'm thinking, what I'm doing, what I'm feeling. Perhaps that's why they called us the "Me Generation." Apart from the slight that was intended, we were aware of ourselves - our thoughts and our feelings.

Our feelings were especially important because it's our feelings that decide our course of action, in our society. We now talk about "staying in the heart," but then we would have talked about "staying with our feelings."

It involves speaking to another consistent with what's actually there for me. That isn't always welcome. And I don't always do it so splendidly. And it's also an opening for people to try to manipulate me. ("Why don't you be authentic?" someone could say) But that's what's involved nonetheless.

And it involves listening to another with the same ear for authenticity to get what's being truthfully said. Again that doesn't invite me to jump down another's throat, which I have done. It doesn't invite me to snoop on them either. But it does invite me to be open to who they (authentically, actually) are, acknowledge it, and support it.

A barrier on this path is the creation of a constructed self, a mask, an image. We then present the image instead of the self. People buy it or not. Win some, lose some. But empty and hollow.

Another barrier is the abandoning of authenticity in the face of fear, shame, or anger. The prize on this path is to be so afraid you're nearly wetting your pants, so ashamed you can't move your lips, and so angry you could almost burst, and still be neutrally authentic about one's self. Not about the other person. That's their concern and not mine. But about one's self.

"Observe life as it is," meditation master S.N. Goenka used to say, "not as you would like it to be." Eventually if we observe long and deeply enough, we may feel an inner shudder, a breeze where there is no breeze.

I was lying in bed the other night and felt such a thing. Something was wanting to make itself known to me and I knew it was the soul, the Self, the object of the awareness path.

I love this path. Not saying you have to. Put 50 lightworkers in the same room and you'd probably have 40 different paths. But something about me loves it.

When I tread this path, I love to get up in the morning. Being with myself, in the clear and intense way of the awareness path, is a source of joy to me. Well, maybe not when I'm feeling sad and distraught but the greatest percentage of the time.

The whole world is my oyster as long as I'm able to be aware of it, authentically express myself into it, and meet others doing the same or at least open to it.

Three Square Feet of Ground

I have to confess that things seem chaotic and confused these days, at least to me.

The Ukraine, the missing plane, so many situations being interpreted in so many different ways. Sometimes I find myself in so much confusion or I face such uncertainty - and sometimes even adversity - that it just seems to overwhelm me.

We all have those times, don't we? I personally need a way of dealing with them, as Archangel Michael warned me I would perhaps three months ago. A way of dealing with confusion and chaos, uncertainty and adversity.

My natural response at times like these, as longtime readers will know, is to look for the ground under my feet. I look for what I stand on. What principles guide my life? And what is the first principle?

What three square feet of ground do I plant myself on? What do I own and what do I hold to, no matter what?

And for me the answer to all of that is the service of the Divine Mother. I feel abashed saying it. It's like acknowledging you have a girlfriend in grade two. But it's true nonetheless. And I think I need to share something about it.

Two years ago, I believe, the Mother said on An Hour with an Angel that she knew that I had served her all my life. I had. It was true, not like I've served her all that well. But yes. How would I have known she would notice?

Ever since I read the Bible or the Gospel of Sri Ramakrishna, I've loved and served the Mother. Those two books awakened the love of the Mother in me.

And that one word of encouragement, recognition, and acknowledgment from her was worth more to me than diamonds and rubies.

On a second occasion, Archangel Michael granted me and a friend the knowledge that when we listen, the Mother listens; when we speak, the Mother speaks.

When he said it, it knocked me over. What an honor and privilege. Whatever I may have wanted in life was toast after that. What does the Mother want?

I haven't acknowledged the change in my life that that statement made and I haven't based my life on it to date. It's been in unconscious awareness, in incubation; not in conscious awareness, in the forefront of my attention. But it's up to awareness now and the challenge is there.

It's true. The service of the Mother is the ground I stand on and I've been too reticent to say it.

The Mother is the Kingdom of Heaven. Seek ye Wisdom (Sophia, the Mother) and her ways and all else shall be added unto you. The Mother can be known; the Father cannot. The Mother leads the devotee to the Father.

When confusion and chaos, uncertainty and adversity hit me and almost knock me over, the ground that I stand on is and has to be the service of the Mother and Her Divine Plan.

"Alone I am and different, because I prize and seek my sustenance from the Mother." (Lao-Tzu, Way of Life, 72.)

Redefining Illusion

There is no way to represent the changeless. Hence all representations are merely suggestive.

Let me turn aside from the topic of paradigmatic breakthrough for a day and look at our notions of illusion. Just for a change of pace.

I'll return to the topic tomorrow and discuss how to establish a beachhead of understanding in a new contextual area.

We usually think of illusion as unreal, and it is. But thinking of it that way, even though accurate, seems to ignore the fact that for many people the illusion is concrete, sensible, and real in its consequences.

The favorite example of this predicament is to say that a bus hitting me on the Third Dimension will propel me to the Fourth (i.e., kill me), whether the bus is illusory or not.

I'd like to shift the emphasis from illusion being unreal, which I agree it is, to illusion being temporary, impermanent, changeable.

The only thing that I'm aware of that doesn't change is God. Since God is everything that is, everything that is not, and no thing at all, we still face the need to address a seeming paradox here.

To begin with, God is said to be unchanging, and nothing else is. Let's review what our enlightened masters have said about that.

Krishna: "Veiled in my Maya, I am not shown to many. How shall this world, bewildered by delusion, Recognize me, who am not born and change not?" (1)

Buddha: "Ananda, can you not see the difference in nature in that which moves and changes, and that which is motionless and unchanging? It is body which moves and changes, not Mind. ...

"As one forgets the true nature of Mind, so he mistakes the reflections of objects as being his own mind, thus binding him to the endless movements and changes and sufferings of the recurrent deaths and rebirths that are of his own causing. You should regard all that changes as 'dust-particles' and that which is unchanging as being your own true Nature of Mind." (2)

Pseudodionysius: "The Cause of all ... passes through no change, decay, division, loss, no ebb and flow, nothing of which the senses may be aware." (3)

Sri Ramakrishna: "Like the akasa [ether], Brahman [the Father, God] is without any modification. It has become manifold because of Sakti [the Divine Mother]. Again, Brahman is like fire, which itself has no colour. The fire appears white if you throw a white substance into it, red if you throw a red, black if you throw a black." (4)

Chang Tsu tells us that God does create, but is not identical with its creations, affected by them, changed by them, etc.

"As to what pertains to Manifestation, the Principle [of life] causes the succession of its phases, but is not this succession. It is the author of causes and effects, but is not the causes and effects.

"It is the author of condensations and dissipations (birth and death, changes of state), but is not itself condensations and dissipations.

All proceeds from it and is under its influence. It is in all things, but is not identical with beings, for it is neither differentiated nor limited."
(5)

Krishna explained the matter on one occasion.

"This entire universe is pervaded by me, in that eternal form of mine which is not manifest to the senses. Although I am not within any creature, all creatures exist within me.

"I do not mean that they exist within me physically. That is my divine mystery. You must try to understand its nature. My Being sustains all creatures and brings them to birth, but has no physical contact with them." (6)

Thus while God is everything, viewed as being apart from the illusion, God is no thing.

We say that the Buddha did not recognize God, but of course he did. He just called it by a different name than others, such as here: "There is but one common essence." (7) Or here:

"Monks, there is a not-born, a not-become, a not-made, a not-compounded. Monks, if that unborn, not-become, not-made, not-compounded were not, there would be apparent no escape from this, here, that is born, become, made, compounded." (8)

"This not-born, not made and not-compounded essence creates illusory forms which persist for a while and bear a relationship to him (her, it) that cannot be explained. But eventually the compound, changeable things resolve themselves back into the great changeless ocean, the akasha, the Void from whence they came. Hence they are called "illusion."

That leaves us with the problem of us. We say that the purpose of life is to know ourselves as God and that we are God, and yet something about us is illusory.

In fact everything about us is illusory with the exception of that substratum or essence that is God. All our bodies - not just the physical, but the astral, mental, causal, and other bodies - are illusory in that they're not permanent, and all must be shed before we merge again back into God, which is the purpose for which we were created.

So we see in our own selves that the game of life, the divine play, the leela, in which God meets God in a moment of our enlightenment, is entirely centered on creating an illusion from which we God-sparks extricate ourselves and realize again the One Reality behind all appearances.

Our journey is out from home, into the world, and then home again, amid much cheering and celebration (until the cheering stops because there is no other than God).

As some sage once said, there is nothing actually happening here, except Realization.

All is real on its own level of reality - for a time. The bus is real; our death is real - on their own level of reality. But nothing but God is ultimately real.

Everything illusory, all changeable appearances are finally drawn back into the Void when their natural term expires and their usefulness ends. Only the great Void, the transcendental absolute, the essence of everything that is and is not, is unchangeable and therefore real.

Therefore, in my discussions of illusion anyway, I prefer to see the illusion not as what's not real but as what's not permanent, eternal, unchanging.

The New Normal

The early stages of the Tsunami of Love are having numerous impacts on me. One is a desire to live normally again. What a strange feeling that is.

I was once in an enlightenment intensive and had a blow-out realization. In the face of it, all my anger, anxiety and fear fell away. I was amazed at what had just happened.

And after I passed through my amazement, I looked again and saw what my new default was, what the residue of this realization was.

The new default and the residue was that I felt ... normal.

All these years I had been behaving abnormally and wasn't aware of it. Abnormal was normal to me. I felt abashed, but I also felt liberated at having returned to normalcy.

Now again, in the face of the earliest impacts of the Tsunami of Love, I'm seeing that I've been living abnormally again.

The pressures of work, never having enough time to do all there is, being faced with endless requests skews my behaviour. I see my perpetrations and I want to make amends. Let me do that first, before continuing.

I ask the forgiveness of all I have harmed, wittingly and unwittingly. I forgive all those who have harmed me, wittingly or unwittingly. From here on in, let me bow in namaste, namaskar to remind myself of the desire to live peacefully and normally again.

Archangel Michael once described me as a renegade. I have indeed been a renegade.

I've kicked against control. I've lived my life my own way. I've even tried to win over others to that way. Not wise in retrospect.

I look at that and I feel uncomfortable.

I choose to return to normalcy again. Whatever it is that I've been rebelling against, I let it go.

If I am a renegade, then let me be a renegade against my own aberrant behavior. In the face of the earliest stages of the Tsunami, I want to be normal again.

Linda Dillon used the phrase "the New Normal" to describe the new ways of being, the New You, the Nova Earth that's emerging.

But let me now use it to describe the new normalcy being birthed by the Tsunami of Love, at least in me.

⌘ Gender Equality ⌘

No Excuse for Subjugation

What I'm trying to do here is to get clearer and clearer about the subject of gender so that we take away the artificial barriers that men have erected to keep women intimidated and subjugated.

To do that I'd like to go back to first principles and reconstruct the picture, one step at a time. And I hope you forgive me needing to be conceptual to do so but I can't see how it can be avoided.

The purpose of life is to know our true identity as the Divine. That's the purpose of life for you and me.

The purpose of God creating life is that God should meet God. God, being all there is, would have a very difficult task meeting itself.

So God created an illusory world of temporary existence and us finger puppets whose task it was to uncover their true identity as God. If God is all there is, how could any of us not be God? If we were not God, then God would not be all there is.

Sages over the ages have invented a gender way of discussing what happened next and so I need to now outfit God the still Void with masculinity and God the active Creator of the illusory world with femininity.

But neither is actually masculine or feminine. That construction is simply an informative metaphor.

To create this world, "God the Father" sequestered a part of himself, which sages have called "God the Mother." Both the Father and Mother are equally God and share all of God's attributes. But the Father does not move and the Mother does.

He is the Source of creation; the world is created from him (it could not be otherwise). But she is the creator, preserver and transformer of that world.

As Lao Tzu put the matter:

"Nameless indeed is the source of creation.
But things have a mother and she has a name." (1)

He is the clay; she is the sculptor. Both are equally the planner, the motivator, the estimator, etc. because both are One.

If you consider the human act of procreation, you'll see that it very much resembles how the Father implanted the soul (the seed) in the womb of the Mother (this world) and how the soul grows in the womb unto realization of the Father and is then "born" (Self-realized).

Why is human procreation metaphorically parallel to Self-realization? Because the purpose of life is to know ourselves as God and knowing is an act of discrimination and realization. These metaphors assist us in discriminating and realizing.

The Father and Mother then, in collaboration, with him as the silent partner, created a race of beings, their children, each comprised of a soul, the Father part, encased in matter, mater, the Mother part. These souls were tasked with realizing their true identity in a moment of enlightenment, at which point God met God.

The gender distinction was maintained in the fact that each soul was born and immediately divided into two, which we call twin flames. This initial division again reflects the division between Father God and Mother God.

The realization of the oneness of twin flames is a stage in the realization of the Oneness of God. The soul, first divided and later reunited, is a stand-in for God.

One twin flame usually plays the feminine role and one usually plays the masculine, but not always. What was fundamental about twin flames is that they perennially sought each other and their ultimate destiny was to merge.

Just as Father and Mother are One and merge, so twin flames are also one and merge.

Any one soul plays a feminine role in one life and a masculine role in another. This is designed, I think, to provide the spectrum of experience that awakens memories of the One.

What constitutes gender at various dimensional levels differs. At the Third-Dimensional level, the two genders have different apparatuses, serving different functions. The female bears children; the males do not. The female often but not always suckles the young.

In past ages, they were assigned roles. The father goes out and brings in the bacon. The mother prepares it. He works. She raises the children. On and on the division of labor went, flowing out from this first biological differentiation of equipment.

But even one dimension higher, in the Fourth Dimension or Astral Plane, some features of gender disappear. Neither a man nor a woman has genitalia, which people discover to their chagrin. So already the means of making love and impregnation disappear.

On higher levels, people can shapeshift and assume whatever gender appearance they wish. Children are not born in the same biological way as on the Third Dimension. In fact there are no marriages in heaven, but there is also no childbirth as we know it. The higher we go, the less there is of what we consider gender. So gender is definitely temporary and less and less prominent as we return more and more to the Source.

All along the soul has never had gender. The soul is not male or female. It is God and God does not have gender.

The function of gender at the level of the transcendent is to represent the existence of God in two modes: the still and the active, the silent and the sonic. It embeds the distinction of difference in us and prepares us for knowing the Mother, whom alone we can know, which then prepares us for knowing the Father by "un-knowing."

Along the way, a milestone is our becoming androgynous or balanced. Another milestone is us merging with our twin flame. These are all waymarkers on the road to the realization of God as our true identity, on the road back to unity or oneness, on the road back to God meeting God.

What's the point in saying all this?

Well, I want us to see that none of these distinctions is permanent, none is fixed in stone, and none need ever bind us. None provides a basis or an excuse for subjugation and yet intimidation and subjugation are all around us in our world.

The refusal of education to young girls, forced marriage, forced sterilization, economic inequality, honor killings, dowry deaths, on and on the list goes of acts of persecution against women, most of it designed to keep them subservient to men.

There is no reason, save the limited biological function of child-bearing laid down in the Third Dimension by Mother/Father God, for assigning all of some functions to women and all of other functions to men.

There's no basis or excuse for subjugation in the temporary Third-Dimensional fact of gender differentiation and there was never intended to be any. Life was never intended to be the way it is in some countries today.

Men will never bear children, at least in foreseeable future. That's true. But that biological specialization can be allowed for and accommodated.

It provides no grounds for an assumption of male superiority. It's no basis for the view that women are somehow handmaidens to men. It's no basis for taking away from women their absolute right of self-determination, free will or choice.

In the world we're entering, women will have the absolute right of self-determination, free will or choice. There's no excuse any longer for denying it to them here, as men have done for millennia.

In those areas where they're biologically committed, allowance should be made for the impact on the fulness of their lives. This impact should be compensated for in all ways.

The fact that they go through the pain and inconvenience of child-bearing should be recognized, supported and catered to. Rather than removing women from the stream of compensation, they should be paid for bearing children, recognizing it as a task as surely as any other productive task is.

The tendency of men to arrogate power to themselves has no future. The practice of subjugating women through violence and intimidation has no basis in the Divine Plan or design of life.

The existence of gender is not a basis for exploitation or an acceptable excuse to exploit. The existence of gender is to provide us with experience and fan the desire to merge with one another, and ultimately with God.

All of us have been men in some lives and women in others to experience the different sides of ourselves and inquire more deeply into who we actually are. We work against the Divine Plan and design for life when we try to gain power over another. We plunge ourselves more and more deeply into ignorance and darkness, moving farther and farther away from the purpose of life.

This is an Age of Light, of forgiveness, love and trust. It's an age of empowerment, equality and opportunity. And it's an age of letting go of what has not worked.

Arrogance, disempowerment, and subjugation have not worked in the past, do not work in the present and will never work in the future. Equality, empowerment and acceptance are, as far as I can see, the only way to build a world that works for everyone.

Where Gender Inequality is Concerned, We're Not Nationals. We're Globals

A whipping. The worst pictures of gender persecution cannot be shown without shocking and alienating readers.

I called attention to a channeled message yesterday that showed God threatening all his (her, its) children. But listen to Archangel Gabrielle addressing people who commit some of the worst crimes on the planet.

Archangel Gabrielle is, by her own description, “central administrator of this and many universes.” She was discussing what the Company of Heaven intends to do with men who perpetrate some of the most heinous crimes against women, to get them to stop.

These crimes include honor killings (the murder of a woman who refuses her parents’ choice of a spouse), dowry deaths (murder committed from trying to extract higher and higher dowry payments), acid attacks (against women who rebuff a man’s advances), judicial rape (local councils ordering a woman to be raped), custodial rape (prison officials raping female inmates), and infanticide (the killing of female babies).

Surely these crimes fall under “opposing the desire ... to live in peace and harmony.” But what did she say?

“We wish you to put all men and all women who would agree with such behaviours in what we will call a form of containment. Now this is not the same level or type of containment that has been in place primarily by the Mother and Archangel Michael, but let us put them in a containment, a container of the Mother’s clarity, of blue topaz, and let the floor and the lid be the clear white of her purity.

A woman can be stoned for "adultery." A man is usually not.

“Yes, we know it will hold millions. And let us do this right now as we speak, ... with you, with the citizens of Earth. This issue of hatred is not protection. It is not honor. It is hatred. And it is the feeling of lack of self-worth on the part of those who would hold these beliefs, or follow these practices, put these practices into form and action.

"Let us gather these, what we will call, lost souls and hold them in the Mother’s blue topaz, of her gift of clarity, so that they may see. I offer you our help to do this.” (1)

Containment involves exposing an individual to clarity, purity and love. Where is the punishing God here? And yet we are discussing people who commit some of the most horrible crimes that occur on Earth.

Is it not night and day between the two statements? The one threatens the very thing that everyone fears most in life: extinction. The other threatens ... love.

Archangel Gabrielle went on to say that everyone involved in perpetrating and addressing gender inequality can expect a radical adjustment, a statement that surprised me.

“The time of subjugation is coming to an end. And in some areas that is a mild adjustment. But in many areas of your planet it is radical adjustment. And it is radical adjustment not only for what you think of as the male part of the population. It is radical awakening for women as well. And it is radical adjustment even for women who have been demanding and working for this equality.”

Everyone on the planet has been harmed by gender inequality and by the excesses committed to maintain that system. The parents who kill suffer injury as surely as the victims do. The people who must encounter these atrocities and oppose the men who perpetrate them, according to Archangel Gabrielle, are also affected and eventually will have to heal.

The list of crimes committed against women is large. As a refugee adjudicator, I can remember listening to the testimony of women being used as sexual slaves by mafia groups and of women who had risen to become doctors against all odds and still were sent to foreign countries to practice and had every cent they earned confiscated by their parents.

They had to live in compounds with no freedom. They themselves had been denied medical attention when small children because they were girls.

There are local councils or jurgas in some countries that sentence a woman to judicial rape if she protests against her lack of freedom. In such a manner are women “kept in their place.”

Most women who’ve been abused in the worst ways never make it to foreign shores to ask for asylum. The women of Darfur probably will never be able to seek or see freedom until radical change occurs. Women captured and sold into sexual slavery in foreign countries might never again see the light of a free day.

Archangel Gabrielle described the double bind of trying to work against these crimes. If we feature pictures of women killed in honor killings or physically disfigured from acid Subjection of Women 22id attacks, people would probably turn away from the stories. And so she said that a middle ground has to be followed.

In many countries, women are forced to wear burqas or other forms of cover because it's felt that they'll tempt men into lewdness or impropriety. There is no understanding of personal responsibility here. How can it be justified to force such measures on an innocent person? What does that do to one's consciousness, to perpetrate such lies and falsities?

On that subject, Archangel Gabrielle said:

“The beauty of men and women is to be seen, enjoyed, marvelled at, celebrated, and, yes, now I speak of the custom of hiding oneself, of treating women as if they are temptress, as an occasion of sin and therefore must be hidden, thus hiding what has been birthed from the heart of the Mother.”

She said that we can no longer act as nationals in ending gender inequality. We have to act as globals and speak out against the crimes against women. And, best of all, she agreed to come back on the show to keep us updated on the progress of ending what she called the “lynchpin” of maltreatment on the planet.

The Pendulum Swings the Other Way

Archangel Gabrielle, administrator of many universes and manager of the Mother's Divine Plan, has addressed us as a world and said that gender inequality must end. (1)

All forms of inequality must end, but she calls gender inequality the lynchpin and a domino that is falling that will lead to equality in many other areas.

She earlier called the violence that men practice on women "the longest war in human history." (2) If there is to be peace in the world, then men need to stop making war against women.

She announced that men who make violence against women will be given special treatment - a light containment of clarity, purity and love - an extra portion of what we're all being bathed in. That includes the women who support men being violent against women.

Acts of persecution, discrimination, exploitation and oppression against women will no longer be tolerated on this planet, according to the administrator of the whole show.

Why should it take the chief manager coming in and calling a halt to what is manifestly undesirable and unproductive on the planet? Who can practice inequity of treatment and feel that they are contributing to the world working out? Nobody.

May I make a suggestion. So many of you have participated in the Reval and you'll become people who can make a difference in the world around you. When you come into your prosperity, don't forget women who continue to suffer from the worst elements of inequality: young girls, the divorced, single mothers, and widows.

Each of those categories of women, in our countries or in others, suffers disproportionately from being members of a system that, until this time, favors men in most circumstances.

The pendulum must go in the other direction temporarily if balance is to be achieved. Let the pendulum now swing to global attention being paid to the plight of women and let those who find they have the means keep an eye out for those causes that promote the equality, rejuvenation and success of women.

Growth is the Order of the Day

I'm going through a creative explosion over here. And I may not write it up as well as I should.

I'm feeling a real push towards something that is, to an extent, inchoate in me. It's reorganizing my life. No doubt about that. It's acceptable to me but many parts of it remain unknown.

If I were to say that I'm being drawn towards starting and maintaining a global conversation, that would describe the outer shell. But it doesn't capture the inner sense. And it doesn't say what I'd want to communicate about.

In the midst of this creative explosion, my seeing of it is magnified. Please allow me.

In the past, when I've felt this way, I've communicated in this manner but without knowing what to communicate about. Well, that has lifted.

I know what I want to communicate about now, at least in part. And I'm only talking about the conversation I want to start; not about the conversation you may want to start or the next person or the next. I do note that the thing that links this all together is that I'm feeling driven to communicate.

The global conversation I would start is all about aspects of human growth. It's about moving to a higher level of functioning. It's all about expanding the meaning of humanness.

Let me give you an illustration. The notion of human rights could use an expansion in meaning and if it was expanded that would also expand the meaning of humanness generally.

The notion of "human rights" as it exists today is based in empirical materialism. We have bodies. We have wishes. We say things. We hear things. And these are the things that our rights take into account.

But most of what you're reading about here goes way beyond that. We're talking among ourselves about Ascension, dimensional levels, formless beings, tsunamis of love, beings who come from other planets, are invisible to us and reside in cloaked ships. Very little of what we're speaking about fits into the paradigm of empirical materialism.

So, for me at least, that paradigm has to give way. And it giving way will expand the meaning of humanness. But this is only one direction and one example. I feel the need to expand the meaning of humanness in all directions.

"Human rights" will expand into sacred rights, divine qualities and universal law, I believe. That's one example of what's gripping me these days. But it's the being gripped that's important. I feel gripped. I feel driven into a conversation.

You may feel captured by the idea of building a free-energy machine. You may be dying to build a Reiki school. I can entirely agree with those aims, while I may not be invested in them myself.

But it's the conversations that seem to need to start that is impressing itself on me. And they seem to need to come from a global context rather than from a merely local or even national context. That also is important, or so it seems to me.

We need to let a certain process that I'm not a hundred percent familiar with unfold and unroll. Courageously. (I learned that from a friend.)

To put the matter another way, we need to rise to our full stature and speak with our entire being, which lines up with seeing or discussing the picture globally.

"Globally" could mean at a level that takes in the entire planet. Or it could mean at the most expansive level that we can see and discuss from. We're driven to a global conversation on whatever it is that's there for us. Well, I am.

The pressure that I feel is to grow. Growing is clearly the order of the day for me. I can't say how I know it. But I know it. And I know I know it.

We must get bigger and bigger and bigger if we're to be able to appreciate and contribute to all that's coming towards us.

Let's face it, if you'd allow me to say so. There never was a time more promising for human expansion than there is now. There never was a time more amazing and auspicious for the human race.

As one who respects the sacred rights and divine qualities, the divine plan and the universal law, I welcome it and I want to work with it. I want to get myself out of the way.

That's my plan. I'm being transparent about it. That's probably my soul contract too, but I don't know that for sure. But do I embrace it? Oh, yes, you bet I do.

What Does Freedom Really Mean?

I'm not relating here to spiritual freedom - the freedom that comes from enlightenment.

I'm relating instead to the felt experience of freedom, what we are, do, feel and have in our lives that gives us the swelling sense of freedom, prior to winning the ultimate release of enlightenment.

It's an interim, middle-ground concept perhaps, but one that we respond to and a condition we want.

Our design is perfect. It allows for healthy functioning, a stress-free existence, love, joy and all the other conditions which, when present, we say that we feel free.

And then we begin to introduce stress into our lives when we're ordered around, treated miserably, lose sight of fairness, feel fear, and enter into the conditions of a life lived divorced from the divine qualities, whether it's we who've left them behind or others who've drummed them out of us, so to speak.

The "free" condition is the condition we were designed and meant to live in. The uplifted, joyful, expectant state accompanied by as much play as work, work of our own choosing, challenging and reasonable in amount, with lots of time thrown in to devote to our own projects.

Freedom includes safety - freedom from threat, harassment, injury, and exploitation. It includes the right to choose - our own friends, sacred partners, workmates, and neighbors. And it includes the wherewithal to afford these things.

Here we are in a world in which these conditions are not all present or apparent or necessarily in the immediate offing.

And yet we have the help of a cast of thousands, and our own resolve and willingness, to build such a world. And we have high expectations of success.

This is a world that works and for the first time in history we get a glimpse of the fact that we can do this. We can build a really free world.

Never before have such exalted beings as the archangels been our active partners in that work. In earlier times, Archangel Gabrielle may have visited Elizabeth and Zaccharias or Mary and Joseph and had a word with them.

But today Archangel Gabrielle visits a radio studio and does a show with us. Or Archangel Michael speaks to us personally, answering our questions and giving us guidance. Never before has this happened and happened so openly and frequently upon this planet.

We are moving towards a state of freedom that has not been experienced on Earth since before any of us can remember, individually or collectively, short of consulting the Akashic Records.

Every plank that's being put in place — the ending of nuclear war on the planet, the prevention of the outbreak of other wars, the thwarting of plans to reduce the population, the cleansing of pollution, the nurturing of a global temperate climate, the removal of financial blockages, the raising of our vibrations - brings us one step closer to the world of our dreams.

Even as we sit here, wondering when anything is going to start, millions of people around the world are building the infrastructure of a world that works. Many of them are unseen; all are unknown; and all of them are working for the love of it, with no expectation of reward.

That alone should bring a smile to our faces. To know we are that much loved and cherished that people have come here from vast distances in space to assist us to lift ourselves out of the conditions that have held us down for so long and welcome us into a new dimension, a new way of being, and a new, unending happiness.

Building a New Social Philosophy

There are so many myths being exploded at this time. One is, as someone said recently, that rugged individualism was enough to have a person be all they wanted to be in North America (I can't speak to other cultures).

That myth underpinned economic capitalism. According to it, anyone in America could realize their dreams by working hard. That view was buttressed by being associated with Christianity as "the Protestant work ethic."

It was used to disparage other systems. The word "socialist" eventually came to be viewed as pointing to traitors, at everything America was not. And anything that actually did benefit the common people, such as universal medicare, was branded socialist.

And the populace, who would have benefited most from a robust system of universal medicare, appeared to have swallowed it.

But gradually we came to see that the people in power and authority had no intention of letting wealth or resources somehow "trickle down" to the middle class and below. After automation turned the labor market into a buyer's market, we watched as pension plans were dropped, the social safety net was shredded, companies were turned from vertical sources of employment to horizontal users of often contract labor, and jobs and careers were funnelled into the computer or shipped overseas.

Some people have not had raises in years. My pension goes up by .9% a year, while the cost of living goes up by a very great deal more. In fact it seems in general that prices rise quite robustly but wages and salaries remain the same - or for some are even cut.

None of us appeared to suspect that we were being sold a bill of goods. Even when junk-bond mania, the dot.com bubble, and mergers and acquisitions drained value from the economy, even when several foreign economies were scuttled by currency speculators, and even when the banks began to foreclose on mortgages, it seems that we still assumed that those in charge had our best interests at heart.

Revelations about such dark matters as 9/11, media control, weather warfare, interest-rate fixing, the draining of gold from gold reserves, etc., have shown just how extensive the collusion was to center wealth in the one percent.

Now we're in danger of trusting no one. But that's where we come in. One of the structures we need to rebuild as we construct Nova Earth is our social philosophy. And it's my hope that we can see that no social philosophy not based in the divine qualities can last or serve as the foundation for a world that works for everyone.

Those divine qualities include such things as unity, compassion, harmony, non-judgmentalness, love, forgiveness, etc. The predominantly male ethic that buttressed our social views of earlier years, with its accent on assertiveness, competition, and force has little to contribute to us any more, if it ever did.

Now, instead of looking out for number one, we need to look out for each other. Instead of eating their lunch before they eat ours, we need to see that everyone has a lunch. And instead of watching people go to the wall, unable to afford medical services or housing, we need to see that everyone has a guaranteed minimum of services and resources.

I remember feeling immensely proud of my country, Canada, not only for its universal-medicare system but for the array of social services that were available to those who couldn't afford them. We need to return to those days and see that no one goes homeless or hungry any more, no one is denied health care because they can't afford it, and no one goes without electricity, heat, or other basic services, for any reason.

Our wealth and resources, if shared, are enough for everyone on the planet. It's time for us, I think, to take the leadership and direction of society back from those who misused it and to demonstrate that we ourselves have the benefit of the whole planet in mind and intend to see that all resources are shared.

National Ego

One of the predictable crises that arises when global change is before us is the matter of national pride or ego. In my view, the subject is something we need to broach with each other and navigating it may require a fair amount of compassion.

The belief that nations have a character goes back at least as far as the Nineteenth Century. National character was used to bring in a great number of racist laws, eugenic policies, and diplomatic initiatives designed to protect the "purity" of the race or nation. Ever since that time, there's been a slow retreat from its excesses and false grids.

Archangel Michael pointed to national ego as being behind attempts to hold up the Reval and create a clash between nations over the Crimea. He told me in a personal reading March 5:

“One [issue holding up the Reval] is what we would call a national ego issue. ...

“There is a reticence, because of losing status in the world, for the United States to admit that the country it has condemned and the war it has waged now has a currency which is in many ways more valuable because of petrodollars than their own. So there is an issue of saving face.” (1)

Ashira in Heavenly Blessings on March 11 included Russia, the Ukraine and China in the circle of nations whose egos were involved:

“What is going on with Russia, the Ukraine, the Crimea, and we cannot leave China out of this mix, and the United States of America for that matter, is ego and it is the flexing of ego muscles, national ego muscles. There is not a sacred cause behind this.” (2)

We may not be selling each other the kind of race theories that supported much of the worst aspects of behavior in the Twentieth Century, but apparently we still do many things based on national ego.

At the same time, there is a collective fellow-feeling that's based upon the soul group, service to the Mother, etc., which ennobles and does not detract. So while throwing out the perspectives that separate racial groups, a distinction based only on the body, I'm not suggesting we throw out all sentiment connected to the soul collective, to relationship, and to human unity. It isn't that collectivity is to blame. It's that one form of collectivity stands in the way of the much wider form that is truly ennobling.

The problem we encounter in letting go of separative feeling is the same for a nation as it is for an individual. We face the same difficulty with a core issue or a false grid as we do with a national concern. We want to let go of that which doesn't work while not letting go of the lessons we've learned and the skills we've developed by wrestling with that issue.

If we're dealing with core issues, we call the skills we develop the "flip side" or the "saving grace." There is a flip side or saving grace to having wrestled with so many national concerns, human rights, and collective violence.

There are two parties to letting go: the one who lets go and the one who must live with the person letting go.

The one who lets go must be willing to risk looking wrong, feeling invalidated, and being blamed. It takes a great deal of courage to let go of an issue that has defined us for years, that we believe has brought us all we have in life, and that protected us from loss or harm.

The one who lives with the person letting go - whether in a family or between nations - must be willing to settle old scores and start anew. Those who go forward with us have to be allowed to do so with a clean slate. Their "rap sheet" has to be left in the past.

The one who welcomes them back must be willing to see - and value - the lessons learned and the skills developed as a result of everyone dealing with the original issues. They have to make that learning and skill development more important than the unworkability and self-righteousness that characterized the former ways of being.

The person letting go needs the support of the rest of the collective. You remember Archangel Michael citing the example of the prodigal son. The prodigal son was welcomed back into the home while the elder brother, who had always been faithful, resented the welcoming reception, which he felt he had never had.

But to bring peace to the world we have to welcome back a lot of prodigal sons. If we don't, we'll never have peace in the world. A lot of elder brothers will need to be willing to put their own needs aside during that process and join in the welcoming committee.

To accomplish that, we'll have to let go of wanting to be right, needing to feel important, and needing to take credit for things. It's a superior art that calls for balance, humility, and detachment. And for a time the only satisfaction coming from it may be the peace itself that results.

We'll need to draw on workable patterns of behavior wherever they're found.

When a child misbehaves, parents are accustomed to saying "no" to the behaviour while not saying "no" to the child. We've learned to separate the behavior from the child. This workable pattern has to be imported and applied here.

We all of us know that the process of growth for ourselves involves raising a matter to awareness, assessing it in light of workable principles that all of us accept, and then re-choosing whether we want to continue the behaviour or not. This is another example of a workable pattern of behavior that also needs to be imported.

And there are others that we'll see and need to incorporate as we begin this aspect of creating a world that works.

This is not work to be left only to diplomats. This is work we can all discuss and join in on. Parents know ways that work. Teachers do. Bus drivers do. We all need to bring forward whatever in life has worked and apply it to the erasure of national ego and the substitution of workable ways for the world.

Some Background on the Chaos in the Ukraine

Russian Missile

Not only is it the case that military powers can lose their supremacy in the normal course of events (think Rome), but in this era, it's also the case that military powers are being constrained by forces that most people don't even know exist.

While I cannot speak about the Russian side of the conflict now underway in the Ukraine, which Stephen Cook is addressing, the challenges that beset the American side, though few in the Third-Dimensional power structure would acknowledge or have acknowledged them, are now starting to make themselves known.

While we tend to think of the American military machine as being supreme in the world, it's been challenged in ways that make it far less the power that it once was. And now it's being challenged on the economic front as well.

On the military side, the Russians, continuing their quest for soft spots in American armour that originated with Stalin, (1) developed unstoppable, carrier-killing missiles (Sunburn and Sizzler) that made the U.S. carrier fleet obsolete some years ago. (2)

They sold these to China and Iran as well. While the U.S. has been unwilling to admit the shift in the strategic balance of power, its most versatile weapon - the carrier fleet - has been made a paper tiger by the simplest of strategies.

Moreover, the Chinese, in the Bush years, proved to the United States that they had the ability to bring down American aircraft when they forced Vice-President Cheney's plane to land in Singapore on its way back from Australia. (3)

Some commentators believe that the Chinese also forced the B-57 carrying missiles to the Middle East to land at Barksdale some years ago. (4)

Furthermore, there is evidence that the Chinese embedded Trojans in all American military motherboards manufactured by the Chinese, causing them to fail under war conditions. This development was discovered when three separate weapons systems failed under test conditions. (5)

As if these difficulties were not enough, we know that the galactics have denied the use of nuclear weapons to all forces on Earth, which removes the ultimate weapon from everyone's arsenal. (6) It's only the fact that very few people Earth know this fact that allows the militaries of the world to continue pretending and posturing, playing the empty "nuclear card."

There are significant peacemakers at work in the American military. It's been my sense for some years that the American Navy led the way in wrestling the nuclear football away from President Bush and taking over Northern Command, which is the service that oversees the secret space fleet, Solar Warden. (7)

Before we break into a sweat thinking about the possession of space ships and their weapons, remember that the Galactic Federation of Light, according to Adamu, consider them "your tin toys and party favours." (8)

My own suspicion is that, when a former military power is in danger of losing its position of superiority, the chances of an outbreak of war go up. But we have to factor into the situation what Archangel Gabrielle said on March 6, 2014 that the situation in the Ukraine would not be allowed to erupt into war.

"This is not going to deteriorate into what you think of as a global war, conflict, situation. ... It is not permissible. It is not allowable, not in any dimension or scenario, and certainly not in the scenario of the Mother. As her central administrator, I tell you this simply will not be permitted, to degenerate to this level." (9)

Matthew Ward also reassured us in his most recent message: "Turbulence in the Ukraine will bluster on, but there is insufficient momentum in Earth's energy field of potential for eruption into a widespread battleground." (10)

On the economic side, as the Reval approaches, the United States faces a challenge to its national pride. Archangel Michael conveyed to me in a personal reading on March 5 that the United States had made war on Iraqi soil for a decade and now must face the fact that the Iraqi currency would soon be worth more than the American dollar. And this is a blow to national pride, he said.

Apparently, that's causing some of the foot-dragging we see around the Reval. (11) I'd imagine the same sense of wounded pride occurs around the elevated worth of Vietnamese and Zimbabwean currency as well. However, Archangel Gabrielle said on that subject: "Do not worry. A delay is but a moment in time. What has already been started will not be halted." (12)

As given elsewhere, Archangel Michael described the loose coalition that has formed between Russia and China:

Archangel Michael: The Russia Ukraine debacle ... is also truly about oil and gas and so there is a struggle about who is going to control what we would refer to as oil dollars. So there is this loose alignment which has been unusual between Russia and China – and we are talking about the power regime of China and not the [Chinese] Elders – so there is a reticence [on the part of Americans] to give all the oil buying power to that alliance – Russia, China.

Steve: Is Russia colluding with China to turn a blind eye to what China is doing in Zimbabwe? [China is building a military airbase.] (13)

AAM: Yes, but it is coming to an end because human beings are quite fed up.

There is significant ... we can't call it intervention ... but can we call it attention? ... that your star brothers and sisters are bringing to this entire situation. (14)

Many people who know nothing about Ascension and the Company of Heaven see this as a time of American military decline. It isn't just a time of American military decline. It's a time of the decline of all resort to military force, period.

To be sure, one death is one death too many. But at least we lightworkers know that the efforts to push the situation in the Ukraine to all-out war won't succeed and most others don't know that. Their estimations are based on the fear that it will.

Therefore the onus on us increases to remain balanced and centered as the 1 percent of the 1 percent - the last military planners - attempt to send the world into one final withering tailspin.

Globally, Universally

The notion that we must speak as globals rather than nationals to end gender persecution is definitely in the wind. Archangel Gabrielle urged it on An Hour with an Angel March 13, 2014. (1)

Later Graham, Linda and I discussed what was said and decided that next week, we'd talk to Archangel Michael about acting as globals.

I said on another occasion:

"A global conversation is a chat we have as a world. A global conversation is a discussion that arises from the context of our shared characteristics. A global conversation is a conversation that speaks to our commonalities." (2)

Each time we break through to a new level of communication, there's a corresponding expansion of consciousness. (3)

In speaking globally, we accomplish numerous goals. We roll back the artificial divisions imposed on us by the powers that were. We recognize our shared interests. We promote unitive consciousness. We prepare ourselves for Ascension.

What often holds us back is what we consider to be respect for other religions, cultures, societies, nations, etc. We certainly have seen in the past ample examples of people addressing other religions and cultures and foisting their own self-serving values on them so we do know the excesses we've gone to when we pretend to address the world.

On what basis can we address the world and not fall into ethnocentrism or similar pits? The answer is to base our speaking on the divine qualities and the universal laws.

Human rights as we've conceived them so far have been a stepping stone to a global culture. But they don't go far enough. They reach the level of the individual and the family but they often don't reach the level of the soul. That's because they're founded on the paradigm of empirical materialism which doesn't recognize that we have and are a soul.

Being only materially based, human rights don't pierce as far as love and joy pierce through to, prosperity for all and unencumbered free will that does no harm.

Freedom of assembly and freedom of religion are important. But the freedom to develop as a spiritual being, the freedom to engage with a sacred partner that goes much farther than simply the right to marry the person of one's choice - it's time to move beyond simply human rights to sacred rights and divine qualities. Only action based on a knowledge of the soul goes far enough to achieve world equality.

"Because all of us are divine, we also share the divine qualities in common. We all know and recognize at some deep level the value of love, bliss, compassion, truth, wisdom, discrimination, patience, detachment and equanimity, etc. That is why those aligned with darkness have such a difficult time when faced with love and truth. At some deep place, they recognize the primacy of the divine qualities.

"Although we have different skin colors, different genders, and different cultures, we also know deeply that these differences need not divide us. Under our skin, behind our gender, and outside our culture, we're all children of God; we're all One." (4)

Oftentimes the impetus to achieve what we want awaits us having the platform from, the forum from, or the cause of which to speak. A global platform produces global citizens. A global forum invites a depth of being that isn't ordinarily available to us. A global cause calls forth a way of seeing and being that transcends all separateness and invites oneness in all ways and forms.

The existence of nations has offered a modicum of protection to some. It's been used by others to corral their populations and exploit them. There's nothing inherent in the notion of a nation-state that ensures the wellbeing of its citizens

But the human spirit is universal and acting from a global consciousness is the next step to experiencing the universal in us all. It's time to think globally, even if in most cases we must act locally. It's time to take up the perspective of oneness and act according to the divine qualities and universal laws.

"It's time now to turn our attention to what's out in our world, what does not work and never has. It's time to stop our behavior that causes pain and damage, whether to our environment, our fellow beings of light, or ourselves.

"It's time to awaken to the global nature of the human family, to shake the sleepy dust of ages from our eyes, look to the next person, and perceive our Oneness.

"It's time to turn to all our neighbors and have a global conversation for the birth of Nova Gaia, to set all unworkable things right and to put us on the path to human unity, equality, and abundance." (5)

In an Interregnum

We're in an Interregnum, (1) a between times, a waiting period. And it's having interesting effects on myself and other lightworkers I know.

Lightworkers are coming alive to love and compassion but without the means to make a difference in the outside world.

We're on this side of the Tsunami of Love proper and the Reval. If either were to hit, it would end our feelings of powerlessness, our inability to effect real change, forever.

When the Reval comes, lightworkers will have the means. When the Tsunami comes, the love will cancel out our issues, or at least I think it will.

But during this Interregnum, we have the desire to make a difference and not the wherewithal to carry through. And that can be difficult and frustrating.

I see myself and people around me making strides but then we lose momentum or we stumble and fall because we have such slim resources, in all ways. We're like young birds wanting to fly on wings without feathers.

And I say to myself, the only way to survive this period in which our vision exceeds our grasp is to forgive ourselves and others for stumbling.

It feels better now to look at successes and overlook failures. For years I did the reverse. But I now see that it makes much more sense and is far healthier to focus on the successes in what we do and let the rest go.

I've had magical, transformative moments with others over the last six months. And even though we couldn't carry matters as far as we wanted to, the strides we made were heart-warming and inspiring. Those memories shine for me and I'm grateful.

I've also had some utter defeats and failures. I acknowledge them as well and beg leave to let them go.

If we can do as much as what I've seen backstage, and do it on a shoestring, well, it only points to what we'll be able to do after these two seminal events. I'm excited. I'm grateful. And I'm pleased.

Spooks, Angels, and Aliens

If we think about it for a while, part of how the powers that were kept us from learning about the amazing and significant, about things that we'd want to have which they wanted to keep from us, was to ridicule anything related to these subjects.

Any one of us can remember the manner in which the local movie cop ridiculed the person who drove in reporting a UFO. Many of us remember the commanding and balanced military types who'd appear on TV and sell us what we now see as a total load of bunkum on subjects that would have been of tremendous interest or importance to us (Roswell, the threat of nuclear war, the need to defend ourselves against "the Commies").

We missed out on free energy and polluted the planet with hydrocarbons instead, sapping Gaia of liquids important to her functioning. (Sorry. I should have put my tin hat on before saying such a thing.)

We dumped nuclear waste in the middle of the ocean, hoping no one would find out until we had a better way of treating it. We drilled for oil in the ocean down to incredible depths with lines the equivalent of drinking straws, which were just an invitation for something to go wrong. And it did, with regularity.

We clear-cut the forests, cleared the Amazon of native habitat and precious pharmaceutical plants, stole land from anyone else we wanted, and crashed economies whose ruin benefited us. We've carried on like pirates of the Caribbean, all the time keeping secret and ridiculing the idea of the very beings who walk a higher way of life and have the power to mentor and benefit us.

These same beings, however, have amazing resolve: they've midwived all the great religions (I can think of three that Sanat Kumara midwived, without even wracking my brain). They've given us seminal inventions and technologies, like the computer you're reading on and the Internet that's bringing this article to you.

Our religious leaders sold us on the concept that death was the end - and we'd better give our Peter Pence before dying if we wanted to go to Heaven.

Our military leaders pooh-poohed the existence of extraterrestrials - even as they were using free-energy devices and flying to Mars in secret space craft back-engineered from "alien" ships - except when it served them to create movies showing ET bent on whipping and wiping out the human race.

And everyone combined to laugh at the notion of angels - a race of beings a few notches higher than us and one that many of us wearing these heavy, clinging wet suits apparently come from.

Well, now we're holding lively conversations with spooks, watching aliens clean up our planet for us and save us from ourselves, and getting peerless wisdom from archangels, every day, every week, on how to get from here (murdering each other) to there (Heaven on Earth).

And one of the changes that I regard as most important is our common agreement among ourselves to drop this withering technique of ridiculing what doesn't fit into our belief system and instead meeting all new ideas with balance, respect and neutrality. Heavens, we may be actually growing up as a race.

What we thought would never happen, what we needed to do to pry ourselves out of this insane paradigm of mutually-assured destruction, is actually occurring before our eyes.

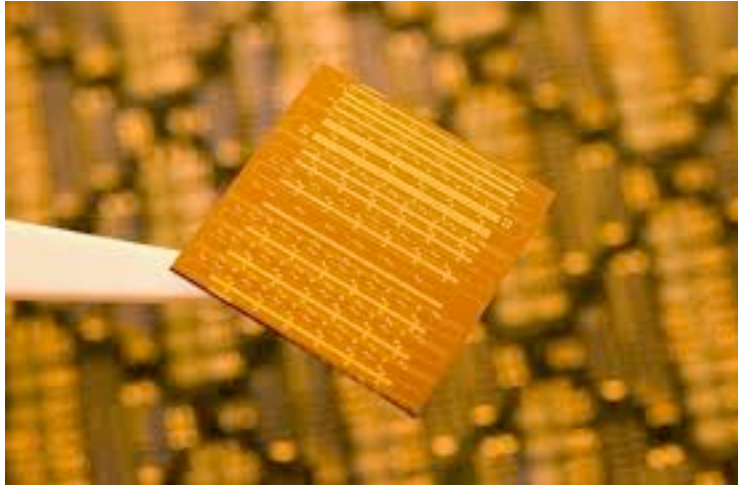

Not only are we actually growing beyond Spanky and Our Gang, we're leaving behind the Boys in the Hood. I don't think we even know what life will be like without the ridicule factor, choosing our favorite victims and then bullying them. I don't think we fully know what life will be like when we conduct ourselves as spiritual adults. (And I'm absolutely willing to be wrong.)

I'm waiting for the rise of a new generation of film and TV directors and song writers - those who create our common mythologies - to take up the challenge of this New Age and show us what's so, what's true and what's real without needing to drag anyone down to do it.

It's a time to let go of ridicule. (And I may need to join in that new phase myself and laugh about it more, instead of remembering it and investing it with seriousness!)

⌘ Galactic Technology ⌘

The Gift of Galactic Technology

Courtesy of our galactic family

I'd like to write a few articles on some of the galactic technology we've been gifted with and some that we can expect to see in the years ahead. There's so much material out on the subject that it makes it hard to wrap one's arms around it.

At the same time, much of it's of a general nature, which makes sense from a number of angles.

First, we might not understand the technology or their descriptions of it, advanced as they are. Second, many people may only be interested in an introduction to it.

Third, the galactics and celestials may just want to warm us up to the subject. The introduction of it could be a ways into the future and they may again be just planting seeds in our minds at this stage.

Let me begin these articles by allowing the galactics to discuss their desire to contribute knowledge, equipment and instruction to us.

Matthew Ward explains what allows the galactics to help us: "Your [star] family's light is more intense than yours and their technologies are far advanced of your own, [so] their assistance has been and will continue to be in ways that are beyond your current capabilities.” (1)

Much of their technology is a blend of consciousness and machine, the Pleiadians tell us.

“We look forward to being able to directly show you [our] craft and have you inhabit and feel our technology, for it must be felt for it to be understood.

“The technology that you will be given will be so personal to yourselves, to your hearts, and you will instantly feel a Loving bond with this technology as it is consciousness itself.” (2)

It'd be very difficult for us to understand it. Prodigy David Adair once examined a motor from a spaceship and came to the realization that it was intelligent and had a symbiotic relationship with the pilot. (See 3) That perhaps illustrates the blend of consciousness and machine.

The galactics are helping us in many ways. Some are downloading helpful information to leading thinkers in many fields of endeavor, the Pleiadian Light tells us: “We are helping you with downloads of information to specialists in many fields to assist you in solving your planetary problems.” (4)

Others have been gifting us with technology, sometimes under circumstances that would startle us.

For instance, the Pleiadian Council through Wes Annac say that many of the crashes of UFOs that led to back-engineered technology had been planned.

The cabal tried many times to bring down starships and sometimes the galactics allowed them to succeed. In these instances our star family wished to contribute the technology that was subsequently “captured.”

I myself worked for Hughes Aircraft and know that Hughes back-engineered the silicon chip from materials recovered from the Roswell crash. Now we discover that transmissions of technology like this may have been intentional.

“Your cabals have only been able to crash or recover crashed ships because of the technology that was meant to be gained from such ships, as we have been helping to carefully plan your collective Life path for so very long and this has included allowing the cabals to back-engineer much of our technology so that humanity could eventually benefit from such back-engineering.” (5)

The computer and internet are galactic inventions.

“One of the ways you are benefitting from this now is the internet [itself a galactic gift], which comes to you on your computers that have been back-engineered from the super-computers we have aboard our ships.

“You are and have been benefitting from the back-engineering of our technology in so many other ways that you will be informed of during the disclosure announcements, and we have long wished to prepare you to learn much of what will be given fruitfully in a short amount of your concept of time.” (6)

They give other examples.

“There are many of these technologies that we could speak of but some that may be most recognizable to you are those of your computers, televisions, smartphones and nearly any other technological modern convenience that you enjoy today but that was not enjoyed even decades ago.

“There is also much more primitive technology of ours that was 'invented' on your world and suffice to say you will be quite surprised to hear of how many simplistic inventions were actually taken from us and our craft, including your zipper and Velcro.” (7)

Add teflon, kevlar, stealth fabrics, and fiber-optics to the list.

Instead of sharing this technology with the masses, much of it was sequestered by the dark, the Pleiadians through Wes tell us.

“Our Lighted technology was both suppressed and fed into your Military Industrial Complex and the more basic inventions of ours which were discovered by your dark on our fallen craft, were reverse-engineered and 'invented' on your world.” (8)

The Looking Glass, a device that can peer into the future, and the underground boring machines that were used to build deep underground military bunkers are examples of technology that was kept from the public.

This sharing of knowledge and equipment awaits the formal disclosure of the galactic presence and their landing on the planet's surface, according to the Pleiadians.

“Following the landings we'll have formally made on your world, which will come about far after the widespread disclosure of our existence, we'll teach you to understand the greater energies at work Creating and sustaining your realities ... and to utilize the technologies we'll happily offer, which have been suppressed for nearly a century in your current society, for the ultimate restoration of your planet.” (9)

Says SaLuSa: “Once we can get together you will enjoy the chance to work with us. We come to share our knowledge with you, and your professional people and engineers will enjoy the chance to use our advanced technologies.” (10) They'll mentor us in the manufacture and use of their devices.

“We and the various other ascended individuals and collectives comprising the Light Forces will be with each of you to share the ascended technologies we have with you and to help you understand how to build and use such technologies yourselves.” (11)

How fast we go will depend on us, Matthew Ward tells us: "The pace of society's progress always has been determined by the planet's collective residents-it can be no other way because it is your world." (12)

So the gifting of technology to Earth has been a carefully-thought-out process. Not all the technology shared reached the general public but enough has that we use galactic devices every time we zip up a zipper, stick something with Velcro, use a fiber-optic device, make a cellphone call, or turn on a computer.

Now the galactics intend to give us knowledge or technology that will allow us to produce and cook our food instantaneously, transport ourselves vast distances in no time, free ourselves from manual labor, clean up the planet and many other useful and pleasurable things, as we'll look at in future articles.

Galactic Methods of Communication

The Looking Glass, which allows for future viewing, was a sequestered galactic technology

The Looking Glass, which allows for future viewing, was a sequestered galactic technology

Let's look at developments in communication technology in the months and years ahead. Again the galactics have not reached the point of sharing information about their communication technology in detail. They offer only tantalizing highlights.

Some of the need for communication technology will disappear when we acquire telepathic capabilities, as Natalie Glasson's sources suggest.

“With time, awareness, observation and empowerment, you may realise you do not need some forms of technology any longer. For example, you may not need a phone because you may have developed telepathic transmission or travelling through energetic dimensions.” (1)

The beginnings of telepathic communication between individuals will slowly take form, Hilarion tells us, “and this will lead to exciting developments in all areas of communication and technology.” (2)

“Many new devices will be created and distributed throughout the world. These will help those on Earth to communicate more clearly and even more quickly than before, not only with the inhabitants upon the planet but also with the star nations as they are recognized as kin.” (3)

We won't watch television any more. SaLuSa describes what will replace it:

“Television as you understand it now will be eventually superseded by holographic images that are of course 3D, and in their experimental stage on Earth already.” (4)

Galactic methods of communication, SaLuSa informs us, are advanced enough to “put anyone in touch with whomsoever they wish, [so] no one will miss out on information necessary to them.” (5)

New communications technology will not be harmful to the body Matthew Ward tells us.

“Current wireless communication instruments that are harmful to brains will not operate in higher vibratory planes, and harmless instruments with the same capabilities and more will become available.” (6)

The computers the galactics use are far more advanced than ours, SaLuSa reveals. And they are alive, which may be hard for us to appreciate or understand.

“We come to share our knowledge with you, and your professional people and engineers will enjoy the chance to use our advanced technologies. As you might expect we are so far ahead of you in computer technology that you be in awe of the advancements that have been made.

“They live and have a mind of their own, and are so sophisticated compared to your level of understanding. They will be there for your comfort and carry out what you would call the menial tasks.” (7)

On another occasion he tells us that they “have magnificent computers that literally have a mind of their own.”

“Yours by comparison are very basic, but serve your requirements for present. All of the new technologies will be yours to use to speed up the changes, and establish a communications network that will seemingly overcome the impossible. Distance will be no obstacle wherever you are in the world.” (8)

The Pleiadians through Wes Annac tell us that we’ve just begun to recognize that such technology exists and its use has only recently become permissible.

“The pairing of consciousness [with technology] is something that has just began to be recognized and allowed for your mainstream world again.” (9)

They explain a little bit more about the pairing of consciousness on another occasion:

“You’ll funnel aspects of your consciousness into the technology you’ll be given, which has been known about on your world and suppressed for nearly a century. The technology many of you may choose to utilize will be sentient aspects of your consciousness, and will be endowed with your perceptions.” (10)

We’re ready now to use technology like this for the good of humanity, he says.

“You are undoubtedly ready for such a quantum leap forward, and you will apply such knowledge for the good of all Mankind. Hitherto your own advancements have been held back for the benefit of the privileged few, and often it has been for military purposes only.” (11)

The Earth has been quarantined by star nations for many years now because of our tendency to export our warlike ways wherever we go. And we have already gone to the Moon and Mars via the secret space fleet, Solar Warden, which the cabal has not admitted to yet.

We already are in possession of much communication technology that has been gifted to us by galactic visitors but the military has for the most part sequestered it. That and much new technology will soon be released, to the benefit of all humanity.

Free-Energy Devices will Revolutionize Our Way of Life - Part 1/2

Continuing with our look at new technologies that will be introduced in the future, the introduction of devices that draw on “free energy” will cause a revolution in our technological world and social life. SaLuSa tells us:

“In the future you will change over to appliances or machines that have completely safe energies. Generally speaking all motive power will come from the free energy that is all around you. Your governments have been aware of it and its applications for many years, and some have adapted it for their covert operations. The ancients were also aware of free energy, but were not sufficiently advanced to apply it to the extent that you will be able to do very soon.

“We simply await the time when we can safely contact you, and introduce many new concepts that will ease your daily tasks and provide a better quality of life. Speed and efficiency will make more time available to you, and that applies to land, sea and air. These changes are all part of the plan to uplift Mankind, and they will take place with extensive help from us.” (1)

The Pleiadians through Wes Annac explain that free-energy devices have been around since the 1930s but they have been sequestered by the cabal:

“That which you know as free energy-based inventions have been around since, at the very most recent, your 1930s and in many cultures before your current society. The blueprints and templates for such inventions were presented before many and while such happenings and the knowledge of them are suppressed today, the revolutionary inventions of many inventors were again, suppressed for 'national security' reasons and in many cases funneled into the various military industrial complex projects as well as used and enjoyed by the elites of your world and only the elites of your world.

“The very existence of such things has been kept secret while being used by the top elite classes for their own gain, and you have been kept on ancient ways to produce your own commodities and needs that such elite souls can make money off of while themselves using the better alternatives.

“Now, the very existence of such revolutionary inventions that truly have been around for nearly a century in your current culture and available in much abundance in previous civilizations of your past; these inventions are beginning to be made known and while so very little is known about these revolutionary inventions that are to truly change your Lives as you know them on a collective and individual scale, when the beginning disclosures and revelations begin to come to the fore as they truly are to so very soon, you will hear about the inventions in depth and you will be shown [them]” (2)

SaLuSa tells us that "the hidden discoveries would have brought you into the 21st Century some time ago and avoided the collapse of your society that you are now experiencing." (3) On another occasion he says that "you should have been able to advance your standard of living much more than it is now."

"Free energy devices will come from us and also many sources on Earth where they have already been developed. Through deliberate policy they have been held back by the Illuminati, to protect their own investment in oil and the utilities.

"Every civilization is entitled to benefit from new discoveries, that are not given simply to be enjoyed by the privileged few, or your armed forces. The ideas for such devices that already exist were intended for the good of all, and made available to you for your independence and self-sufficiency.

"The changes will not be imposed for the sake of it, but are part of our plan to bring you the comforts and protection, that will lift your experiences to a new level and bring you joy and happiness. Following that you will be in the right frame of mind to apply yourselves to the business of preparing for Ascension. That is the ultimate goal." (4)

He informs us that "the biggest changes will be in your present forms of travel."

"The combustion engine will eventually disappear from use. Not only that but the new vehicles will be much quicker and safer to use. They will be using free energy which is our source of power for our craft.

"Everyone will have use of them and they will be absolutely pollution free. These changes have been planned for a long time and are ready to go ahead as soon as it is safe to introduce them." (5)

Free energy will allow us to travel anywhere in the world, quickly, SaLuSa tells us.

Know that in time you will be able to travel anywhere in the world, by a new technology that makes distance of no consequence. Speed will be of the essence, and achieved by using free energy that abounds in the Universe." (6)

Free-Energy Devices will Revolutionize Our Way of Life - Part 2/2

Free-energy devices of all shapes and kinds are being developed

Free-energy technology will end our reliance on oil. Oil was never intended to be taken from the ground. Oil is what lubricates Gaia, Goldenlight's sources tell us:

"Wonderful free energy technologies ... will propel your world 'into the stratosphere' so to speak and reduce your dependence on oil, which is the lifeblood of Mother Earth Gaia. Removing this oil from her body is akin to removing the blood from your body. It drains her and is so unnecessary!" (1)

Matthew tells us that “sources of energy long suppressed must be developed for widespread replacement of oil, gas and coal, as no more of those elements of Earth's body may be removed.” (2)

Atmos of Sirius tells us that the use of free energy will end oil pollution:

“Fortunately, the source of your energy supplies will completely alter in the very near future, and oil shall be left where it should remain in the body of the Earth. Your dependence on oil has long been a thorn in your sides, and left you at the mercy of those who control its supplies and manipulate the prices.

“Free energy involves little cost at all, and will replace your fossil fuels and thereby also ensure that after the cleansing of Earth, there will be no pollution as you now experience it. Clearly your Earth could not sustain the present levels of pollution, deforestation, and the resultant damage for much longer.” (3)

Saul explains that the oil and gas industries will close and their damage quickly cleaned up.

"With abundant free energy readily available wherever needed, coal mining and oil 'harvesting' and exploration will first be greatly reduced and then finally cease, as the industries that require that kind of energy become obsolescent. Cleaning up and repairing the damage that those basically barbaric industrial conglomerates have caused will be a major task in the next few years, and much, in your terms, technologically very advanced assistance will be provided to ensure that this is done cleanly and efficiently." (4)

Those employed by the oil industry will find their futures secured by the new financial prosperity, on its way, SaLuSa tells us.

"What you are beginning to become aware of is the vast opportunities presented by the use of free energy. Naturally the Oil Industry fights against their introduction, but it is the way forward and progress cannot be stopped.

"In time none of the old polluting fuels will be used, and everyone will benefit from clean and efficient methods, that most importantly will include new means of transportation. For those presently employed in those industries we must tell you that your future will be secure. By that time everyone will have benefitted from the new financial systems, and the re-distribution of wealth will ensure that the loss of jobs will not affect your position." (5)

Diane of Sirius says that the introduction of free-energy devices will be part of raising our standards of living and levels of healthcare.

"It is a matter of equipping you in such a way, that your standard of life is immediately improved. A clean supply of water and an ample supply of free energy will overcome many health problems, whilst at the same time giving you heating and lighting where conditions warrant it." (6)

Only for a short time will we need to buy free-energy devices from companies, the Pleiaidians through Wes Annac tell us.

"While companies with Lighted intents will indeed offer free energy technology when it initially breaks-through on your surface, after our presence has been made known and we widely disperse this technology ourselves and teach you how to utilize it, there will be no need for companies to oversee its production, as it will be like a plant that can be grown by every human being who will understand how to grow and build it." (7)

SaLuSa predicted in 2009 that free-energy devices would soon surface, but they have not.

"Free energy devices should soon start to surface, as your own scientists and environmentalists are already aware of such innovations. Those who have a vested interest in keeping them out of your hands are presently holding them back. That will have to change, but first the conditions must be created to allow them to come out into the public arena." (8)

Matthew Ward predicted the early introduction of free-energy tools in 2011 but still it did not come.

"The Illuminati's long-time suppression of free-energy developments will end within months and so will their use of HAARP to the detriment of humankind and the planet." (9)

Again SaLuSa predicted their early introduction in 2012 and still we wait!

"You have been denied advances that would have immediately given you a better quality of life such as, for example, free energy. It will be given to you very soon, and at a stroke change the quality of your lives.” (10)

Some fear remains on the part of those working to develop free-energy devices, Archangel Michael told ius on March 8, 2013: "There is some residual fear on the part of those that are working on free energy to completely go public. But they will be there shortly." (11)

A lot of scientists who bought the empirical-materialist paradigm in science and therefore scoffed at things like energy from the Void will find themselves ruing their attitude.

“Our technologies will be widely understood by all, and your mainstream scientists will kick themselves for largely laughing-away free energy and its potential for mankind.” (12)

Goldenlight's sources describe the massive change the introduction of this one technology will bring:

"Our free energy technology, just this one technology out of many that we will be bringing to you, will change your world forever. Imagine a world wherein the energy to propel or operate everything, where all energy, is free. Imagine a world without sickness or hospitals or pharmaceutical companies in which the health of the human body is always in pristine condition, in which bodies and minds are ageless and in which you can take any form at will.

"This is just one aspect of our higher dimensional societies. ...

"Imagine that during this great festive celebration which we described earlier we unveil these technologies. Imagine what an incredible celebration this will be. A new freedom will begin to overtake your joyous hearts and minds and a most joyous feeling will emanate from you all." (13)

This time of rapid technological strides lies out in front of us, but it promises us an ease, comfort and enjoyment that we have never known, all part of the radical changes we can expect in the quality of life in the times ahead.

A Review of Galactic Work to Neutralize Chemtrails - Part 1/2

Given the reports that chemtrails are still happening in the United States, I'd like to give as extensive a rundown as I can of what the celestials and galatics have said on the subject.

In brief, they've said that they neutralize chemtrails sprayed in the sky, but they allow the visible spectacle to continue in order to build awareness of the cabal's designs for humanity and rally public opinion against their machinations. They cannot simply come in and do the whole job for humanity because this is a free-will planet, but they can mitigate or neutralize the effects of chemtrails and have been doing so for some years now.

Let's start with former Livermore Labs scientist "Henry Deacon" (Arthur Neumann) who in Oct. 2006 said that "chemtrails were developed by Edward Teller and are basically the seeding of thousands of tons of microparticles of aluminum on the upper atmosphere to try to increase the albedo of the planet, the reflectivity of the planet, because of global warming." (1)

He called it “a total gamble. Not nearly enough is understood. It may work, or maybe it won’t.”

However, in the same interview, he went on to discuss the cabal’s plans to lower the global population by various means.

Henry Deacon: The way they see it is there are too many people, and, you know, they're right. That's true. So they figure they need to eliminate them and they're planning solutions to this. I happen to think it doesn't have to be that way. Apart from what I've mentioned so far about the spacetime problems, the problem is overpopulation. It's as simple as that. There are programs to reduce global population for everyone's benefit. Believe it or not, the intent there is positive. It was put together by Kennedy way back then. The RAND Corporation was involved, and one of the Rockefellers, I forget which one, probably Laurance, I think.

Kerry Cassidy: By killing people off?

HD: Basically, yes. Artificial viruses that have been deployed using a number of means and are hard to detect or identify and nearly impossible to cure. Medical people in the public domain can't identify what's happening. ...

Do you know that it's legal to test biological and chemical agents against US citizens? It's legal. You know, all that has to be done is to get the approval of the mayor of the city, or his equivalent in any area. Or some representative official. No-one knows this, but it can be checked out. Go look it up. It's all carefully hidden away in the law somewhere, but it's all in the public domain. It's all there. (2)

As early as Sept. 2010, Matthew Ward was telling us that our star brothers and sisters were alleviating the effects of chemtrails.

“In alignment with [Earth's] goal [of Ascension], our 'space' brothers and sisters are using their technology to alleviate the toxic effects of the oil and its dispersants in the Gulf of Mexico as well as the toxins in other waters, chemtrails and weaponry.” (3)

By July 2011, Matthew was informing us that:

"In most areas where formerly chemtrails were prevalent, the skies now are clear. When some of the pilots, mechanics and others involved in those flights learned the true purpose of chemtrails - the toxic payloads were not to compensate for the hole in the ozone layer, but rather to sicken people and pollute air, water and land - they refused to continue working.

"Others who did know the truth participated willingly in return for handsome payment, but as funding dried up, they also left their employment. However, the most decisive factor in this situation is, some individuals who had ordered or financed the flights are among those who embraced the light, and those who want to keep chemtrails crisscrossing your skies have lost almost all means to do so." (4)

At the same time, SaLuSa was explaining that "chemtrails are more an attack on your health but are not without their effect on your mind. As we recently mentioned, these are being cleared away so that now they have little effect upon you." (5)

That same month, Wanderer of the Skies revealed that:

"We have searched through all of your world and the darkness continually grows fainter as more and more Light suffices your world from energy sources in every way."

"We have detected only sporadic instances of the use of chemtrails, weather changing technologies, and other devices of the Illuminati over the past several weeks." (6)

About a month later, Wanderer returned to say that:

"In the recent past we were concerned with what we perceived as a rise in the level of Illuminati-controlled activities, especially where chemtrails and behind-the-scenes government disruptions of Third World powers were concerned. That appears to have lessened of late.” (7)

In July 2012, Matthew returned to say that Disclosure was not imminent but “during the interim [our galactic family] will continue using technology aboard their crafts to reduce the toxic effects of chemtrails and other pollutants.” (8)

In late 2012, SaLuSa again informed us that “we of the Galactic Federation have also helped by taking part in the cleansing and generally preventing pollution from becoming worse. That also includes Chemtrails which had the potential to seriously affect all forms of life.” (9)

By 2013, Matthew acknowledged that “chemtrails still are crossing your skies in some places and other polluting of your air, water and soil continues; so do desecration of your forests and dreadful treatment of animals in the seas and on land.”

But he reassured us that “you will see that all existing or proposed laws, policies, restrictions, products and systems that adversely impact life on Earth will be stricken incrementally.” (10)

A Review of Galactic Work to Neutralize Chemtrails - Part 2/2

In June of 2013, the Pleiadian High Council informed us that “we’ve indeed been quite active in our quest to help cleanse and mitigate the pollution still being widely fed on your Earth.”

“As many of you know, we’ve been working to mitigate and help cleanse the chemtrails being sprayed in your skies. Even in the areas experiencing the heaviest of chemical skies and thick trails, we’re cloaked offering our assistance in an overall effort to help cleanse the vibrations of Gaia’s atmosphere.

“We’re working to help cleanse Gaia and to help cleanse the collective consciousness of humanity, as much pollution and lower-dimensionality have been fed in both avenues and truly, we cannot do this job alone.” (1)

They said that “chemtrails and other types of visible, noticeable pollution are still being allotted, so that the growing-awakening collective can realize such things and work to expose and put an end to them altogether.”

Thus chemtrails are still being allowed but neutralized as soon as they are released to allow for public awareness and the dissent necessary to rally the population, express its will, and allow the galactics to respond to it.

“We’re looking toward humanity to gain the awareness and enlightenment required for the vibrations of your dear collective consciousness to be allowing enough of ours, and when such a time comes, we can land openly on your world and help you to perform much more potent work than we perform now.

“As we’ve discussed in the past, we can only take so many actions in regards to helping cleanse the planetary vibrations of dearest Gaia. While we possess the technology to perform all of the cleansing work on your planet ourselves, we still act within the confines of a Law of non-interference that’s bred from your collective desire to experience freewill.” (2)

They explained some of the technology they’re using to neutralize and disperse chemtrails.

“We’re using transparent and invisible (to the human eye) vibrations that are funneled through our sentient technology, which serve to mitigate and neutralize many of the harmful chemicals in chemtrails specifically, and in other forms of atmospheric pollution that would otherwise be funneled-down to the physical humanity and to the surface of Gaia, wherein the pollution from such things would seep into Her ground.

“The cabals have taken many measures to pollute your skies and ground.

“We, like many of you, have worked as much as possible from our positions to help the collective of humanity awaken to the injustice being perpetrated unto you in the form of atmospheric pollution and pollution on dearest Gaia’s ground, but again, we can only do so much in regards to all of this.

“What we’ve been unable to stop in regards to harm caused to your environment via the pollution being fed by humanity, has unfortunately been necessary to be experienced; because of your aforementioned freewill and your desire to experience the results of everything you Create and sew for yourselves.” (3)

The amount of karma we must experience is being impacted by the Law of Grace, they said.

“Humanity has long existed under a Law of Grace that skewers the amount of potential negative karma an individual or collective would experience as a result of their actions, and it’s largely because of this Law that we’re able to work as fruitfully in your skies as we are.”
(4)

The next report came from Archangel Michael in August 2013. In a personal reading, I informed him that two readers said that there are still chemtrails out there. He responded:

Archangel Michael: Any release of substance has been neutralized for a while. So, yes, this is part of the unseen work that is being done by your star brothers and sisters and by Gaia herself.

So what may appear to be chemtrails are simply different formations. Nothing is taking effect.

Chemtrails are in the same category - well, perhaps more vicious and violent, more assertive and aggressive - as the pollution of your oceans, your lakes, your rivers. And these are being neutralized one by one by one.

So know this and know that is being taken care of. (5)

I asked him if depleted uranium, which is even more fatal than chemtrails, fell into the same category.

AAM: Oh, it most certainly does.

SB: If the galactics had not neutralized depleted uranium, would this planet have died?

AAM: Yes.

Now let me explain. It is not just that she would have died. It would have been that her will to continue on would not have been there.

SB: Wow, eh? That serious.

AAM: Yes, that serious. (6)

Around the same time Saan and the Arcturian Councils through Wes Annac told us they cannot “solely cleanse your Earth without the assistance of the awakening humanity.”

“We ask each of you to send your Lighted energies and intents toward the cleansing of your skies, especially when seeing chemtrails or other forms of pollution that are being mitigated and in some cases, cleansed altogether. ...

“[The cabals] have taken a great many measures to pollute your skies with chemtrails and chemical skies, and to an awakening soul who wouldn’t understand the presence of the Pleiadians, Sirians and the rest of us around your planet or the mitigation efforts we help perform which aren’t directly noticeable in the physical, this could seem to be a desperate or fear-inducing situation.

“However, beyond the pollution we allow to be manifested because we seek not to ‘do the work’ for you, we are indeed cleansing the bulk of what would otherwise come about because of chemtrails.”
(7)

In November of 2013, Archangel Michael explained that sprays being released may look like chemtrails but they have been infused with codes and elements known or available on Earth to transmute them. He said:

AAM: Chemtrails are not a reality. And again, there are a couple of situations where there are attempts for chemtrails to be dispersed, but in fact these are being immediately transmuted — again, by your star brothers and sisters.

The resources, the real gifts of Gaia — which is, of course, the Earth, the air, the water, the light, the sun — are being restored, and they are also being protected. So, even when it is appearing that it looks like a chemtrail, simply know that there are elements that have been diffused into these.

So the danger — that is really the question — there are a couple, literally, of situations, companies, that are dispersing chemtrails. It is not a normal practice any longer, and when they are released, even as they are being released, they have already been infused with codes and elements that are not known or available on Earth. So it is not happening. (8)

Therefore our understanding of what's happening with the cessation of chemtrails has to go hand in hand with an understanding of the law of free will. The galactics can help us, can even go so far as neutralizing the emissions, but they cannot completely eradicate chemtrails or they will be in violation of the law of free will.

Once they're able to land on the planet's surface, they can quickly, but in concert with us still, eliminate all sources of pollution on the planet and in the skies. Until that time they're doing as much as natural law permits.
